"It's the way they're built that counts"—and Vail devises the way—No name in the automobile industry is more respected by the really informed insiders than that of Ralph A. Vail, vice-president in charge of all Studebaker manufacturing and one of the country's top authorities on production. The Government has assigned Studebaker to the job of building airplane engines on a large scale, because of the recognized ability of Studebaker production executives and engineers to get things done with dispatch and efficiency.

Every Studebaker is marked with brilliance

by America's brainiest automotive engineers and ablest craftsmen

And that's why Studebaker cars consistently stay on the job longer . . . and command top trade-in allowances

W/HEN you invest your new-car W money in a Studebaker Champion, Commander or President, you write your name on the roster of America's best-informed motor car owners.

Studebaker owners buy Studebaker cars, not because Studebaker builds them, but because of the way Studebaker builds them.

Many of the accepted specifications of the modern motor car began as Studebaker originations. And yet, no Studebaker engineering advancement is ever allowed to go into a Studebaker car as an experiment at your expense. It cannot merit the Studebaker nameplate until it has been given a perfect score in the great, modernly equipped testing laboratories and on the 800-acre million-dollar proving grounds which Studebaker maintains.

And that's just the beginning-because, from there on, Studebaker craftsmen, the most expert group of long-time employees in any automobile factory, proudly take on the responsibility of making every Studebaker the most soundly built car of its price in America.

You are missing modern motoring at its best, if you haven't yet driven a 1941 Studebaker. Arrange to do so now, with your local Studebaker dealer. It may prove to be the most money-saving step you've taken since you first owned a motor car.

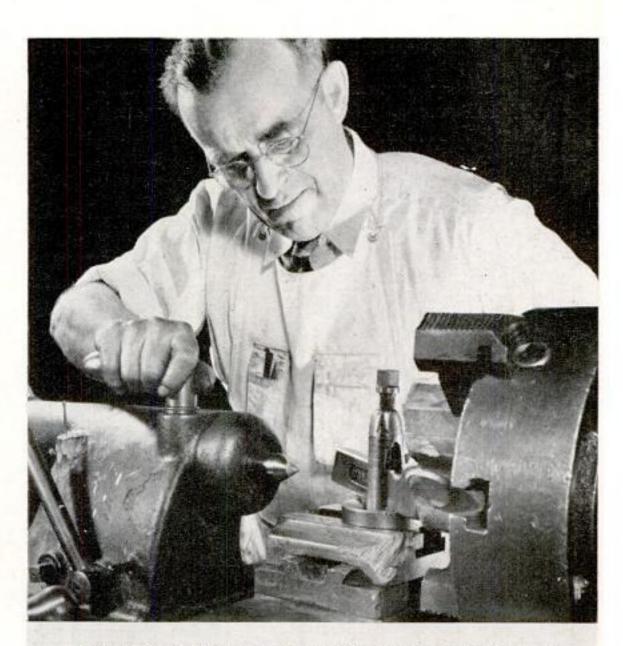

This big, broad-shouldered, handsome Studebaker Champion is now two full years on the market. It has won greater public acceptance in that time than any other lowest price car introduced in the past ten years. The model illustrated is the stunningly styled Champion Custom Club Sedan which delivers completely equipped at factory for $740—contrasting-color belt extra. C.I.T. payment terms.

Champion . . . $695 and up Commander . . $965 and up President . . . $1115 and up

These are delivered prices at factory,

South Bend, Indiana, as of March 17, 1941 -subject to change without notice-Federal tax included.

"Take time enough to do it right"-That's the unwritten law in the vast, modernly equipped Studebaker plants, where craftsmen, averaging 44 years of age and 13 years on their jobs, build enduring soundness into every Studebaker. Pictured is tool and gauge maker Stanley Dewart. The superior workmanship in Studebaker cars cuts down repair expense - increases trade-in value.

Of course they dropped him! Offensive breath is bad enough, but offensive-looking teeth also! Well . . . that's the "Double O," and the combination is too much for any woman to put up with.

But why risk "Double O"? There are two trustworthy products that offer you a delightful double precaution against the frequent causes of this double offense.

One you know about—Listerine with its amazing antiseptic and deodorant power. Listerine Antiseptic is famous for its wonderful action against halitosis (bad breath) due to food fermentation in the mouththe major cause, in the opinion of some authorities, of this condition.

The other is the new Listerine Tooth Paste. Here, at last, is a real aid against offensive-looking teeth. For 8 years our worked to achieve this new, finer dentifrice, specially created to help restore luster to dull enamel . . . personality to your smile.

You'll be literally astounded when you see how it goes to work on tooth surfaces... cleansing, brightening, polishing! Why not see for yourself how much it does to bring out the true sparkle of teeth and smile!

If you want to put your best foot forward, use Listerine Tooth Paste and Listerine Antiseptic, night and morning, and before every social engagement. It's the ideal pair for oral care-the double precaution against the "Double O" (offensive breath and offensive teeth).

Beauty Knifed

Sirs:

Having noticed in your March 24 issue that Nedra Evans of Chicago was considered the most beautiful brunette at the models' show, imagine my surprise to pick up the newspaper the very next night and read that she was stabbed and seriously wounded with a butcher knife by her husband, who then killed his wife's mother and his 2-year-old son. The husband, William Mortimer Evans, then stabbed himself.

Doctors said a button on Mrs. Evans' dress deflected the blade of the knife and probably saved her life. She said her husband had threatened to kill ber, their child, and her mother when he first learned that his wife had filed suit for divorce.

Boston Lyrics

John P. Marquand, in his recent article about Boston in your magazine (LIFE, March 24), quoted part of a "musty song" from an old Hasty Pudding Club show, which started off:

At the Somerset things were rather wet-He claims not to know the end of it. Here it is:

So did all of the rest

For of many ways you can enjoy your

A good old Boston dance is best, best,

These words were written by Jack Reed and were sung effectively by Walter K. Earle (now a partner in the law firm of Sherman & Sterling). The date was 1910. The name of the show was Diana's Debut. Its libretto was written by George W. Martin (a former law partner of F. D. R.) and for some obscure reason the leading characters were Mutt & Jeff, the former being played by

G. PEABODY GARDNER Boston, Mass.

 Lyricist Jack Reed was John Reed, Harvard's famous radical son, who went to Moscow in 1917, witnessed the October revolution, wrote Ten Days That Shook The World and is buried in the Kremlin wall as a Bolshevik hero. Librettist George W. Martin, son of Life's longtime (1887-1933) editor, Edward S. Martin, was F. D. R.'s partner in the firm of Emmett, Marvin & Roosevelt, now Emmett, Marvin & Martin.-ED.

"Its [Boston's] shipping business has vanished," says J. P. Marquand. "A lively ghost," says the Boston Globe, and rightly. The Port of Boston in the latest year of record handled over 16,000,000 tons of cargo-which is twice the tonnage handled in 1905, nearly twice that of 1920, and 2,000,000 tons more than in 1930. my eye chanced to fall upon the large marble bust of John Quincy Adams in the right foreground. Examining the inscription I found it to read, in Greek Capital letters-Gamma, Rho, Eta. Nu, Omega. When read phonetically in English it spells Greno. Further reflection translated that into that great Boston family name "Greenough."

TMAGINE! Flying in a car. No wonder I didn't I believe Johnny when he told me his jalopy did 40 at 2,400 feet. "You don't have to believe me," he said. "Hop in and glue an eye on that Auto Altimeter." And without saying another word we headed for the hills.

Well, I simply never have been so fascinated in my whole life as I was when we hit that mountain road—you know, the one that climbs up and up and up. The Auto Altimeter needle began to climb right around the dial. Before I knew it we were right smack on top of the mountain . . . 2,600 feet high, whew! It really was like flying. I guess I'll just have to believe everything that Johnny says hereafter.

Johnny's right, too . . . the new Taylor Auto Altimeter tells everything about altitude—how high the hills are . . . how low the valleys . . . height above or below your starting point. It is

Longer Convoy

Sirs:

We of the 260th Coast Artillery (AA) appreciate the spread given us on our recent convoy from Washington, D.C. to El Paso, Texas (LIFE, March 17).

I would like to disagree with your statement: "According to its officers and men, it was the longest motor convoy ever made by a unit of the U. S. Army."

In 1920, the U. S. Army sent a convoy from Washington, D. C. to San Francisco. The total road miles covered by this convoy was 4,490 as compared with 2,600 miles traversed by the 260th.

I witnessed, as a small child, the start of the Bankhead convoy and I was a member of the personnel of the 260th convoy.

THE HAPPIEST JOB IN AMERICA!

When a job makes a man a good living, that's great ... but when a job makes a man a good living and at the same time sends him to sleep each night with the satisfaction of having made some fellow human being's life happier that day—well, you don't wonder that there are hundreds of men and women in America who call being a Sonotone Consultant the happiest job in America!

It's a happy job because as you can see in George Karger's photographs of Harry W. Ruth, the Sonotone Consultant in Detroit, Mich., a man can do the complete, satisfying type of job that every man worth his salt craves to do.

It's a great job because the Sonotone Consultant is working hand in hand with the men who pioneered bone conduction . . . the variable pitch amplifier . . . the bifocal audicle . . . the vacuum tube Sonotone . . . new improvements in air conduction . . . the continuous-tone Audiometer that makes possible a personalized fitting technique . . . and half a hundred other inventive triumphs that have completely revolutionized hearing aids.

And it's a heart-satisfying job because day after day these devoted men and women have people come into their offices downcast, handicapped, resigned to a "half-life" . . . and have the privilege, as Consultant Ruth had with Miss McLain, of measuring their hearing needs, of fitting them with Sonotones, giving them better hearing, and reopening the door to a fuller, richer, happier life.

"...I knew I could individualize a Sonotone to Miss McLain's specific needs almost as if I was making it to order, because I had more than 1000 possible Sonotone adjustments to pick from (and every man likes to do a 100% job!)"

"... I knew I could give her better hearing because I had the most advanced hearing aids science has yet developed (people buy more Sonotones than all other makes put together ... and every man likes to ride a winner!)"

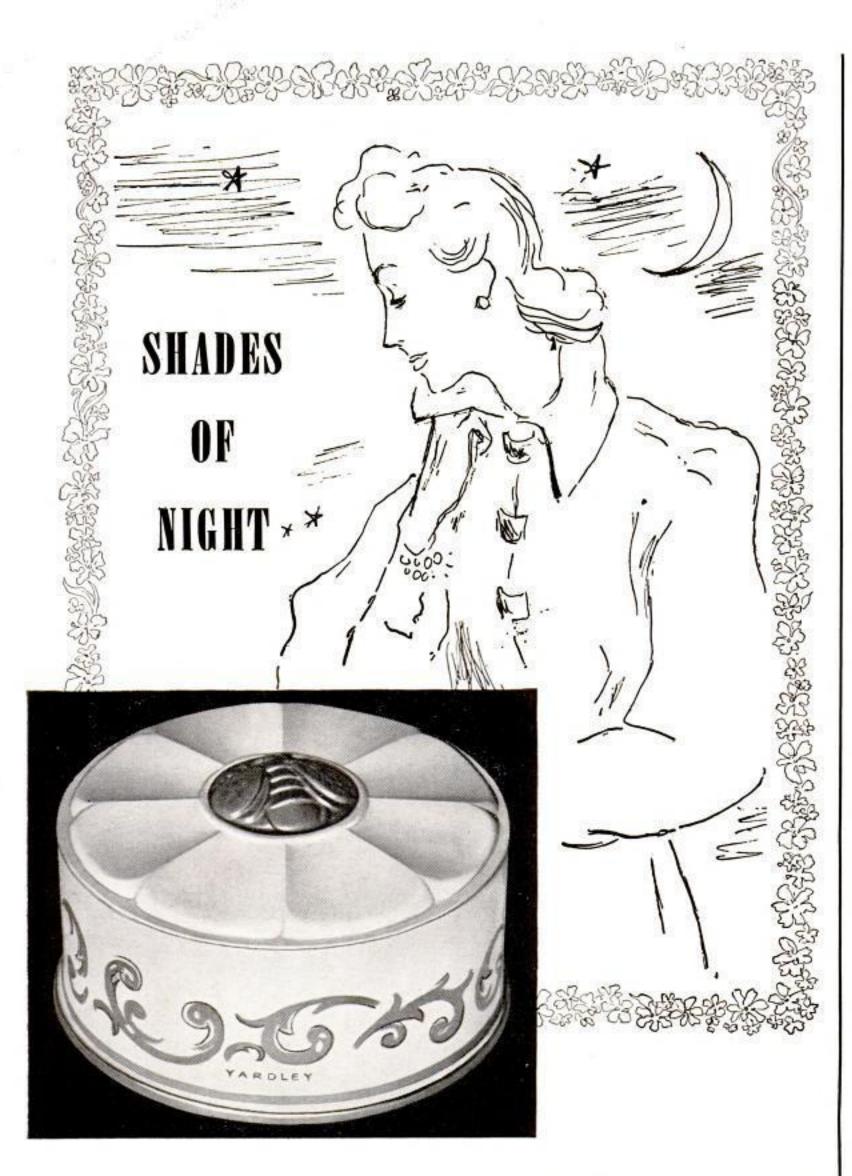

"...I knew I represented the greatest scientific research ever done on hearing aids . . . working hand in hand with men like Dr. Hermann Scheibler and Dr. Fred W. Kranz (and that sure gives a man confidence!)"

"...and 60 days later, I had the pleasure of watching Mr. S. Field, Manager of the Federal Department Store in northwest Detroit, welcome Miss McLain back to a better job as head of the basement hosiery section."

Coasts of Nebraska

Sirs:

Your series of all seasons' pictures of a Nebraska farm (LIFE, March 17) were intensely interesting. I am pastor in nearby Dorchester (Methodist) and I wish you had mentioned Herman Ebers' country church which shows prominently in several of the pictures. Such country churches are a significant feature of Nebraska landscape scenes. Pioneer travelers and explorers were struck with the resemblance of the broad prairies to the sea, and spoke of the "coasts of Nebraska." Particularly at dusk I am often struck with the likeness, with the dim bulks of the farmsteads simulating ships and the church steeples rising like lighthouses.

Honest now, don't you think it's a bit thick? I mean, those pictures of kids "dissecting" squirrels, "probing" the eye of a calf, "studying" the entrails of a chicken (LIFE, March 24). Doesn't anyone remember that the best of childhood memories is of some beloved pet, perhaps a chicken, squirrel or calf? Surely this will make cold-blooded little devils of them. Why not "dissect" some of the teachers.

LIFE'S COVER

The face of New York is as familiar to America as it must be to the seagull who, on this week's cover, soars over the great city's great harbor. But the always familiar face always looks different, as the photographs on pages 86–95 show. Almost everywhere in lower Manhattan, the city begins at the water's edge. At the tip of the island, however, Battery Park provides a small open space before the skyline rises abruptly, stepping steeply up to the tall towers of business.

Try This At Bedtime Tonight

HERE'S that new "morning freshness" idea you hear so much about these days. A simple plan that thousands are following religiously—for clear-eyed morning "sparkle" and energetic days.

What they do is take a cup of new, improved Ovaltine each night at bedtime... not only to foster restful sleep itself—but also to replenish vitality while they sleep.

How It Acts

First: When taken just before going to bed, the new Ovaltine has the power to relieve that feeling of nervous tension, thus conditioning the mind for sleep.

Second: It provides a specialized form of nourishment designed to prevent certain common types of digestive unrest. These conditions, according to medical authority, may be a cause of 50% of all night-time tossing.

Third: Ovaltine also furnishes certain food elements to replenish vitality—rebuild worn-out muscle, nerve and body cells while you sleep.

The new, improved Ovaltine has recently been enriched with greater amounts of protecting minerals and Vitamins A, B and D. It is a scientific food-concentrate designed to accomplish specific nutritional results for those who are rundown, nervous and under par or who sleep poorly.

These are not mere "statements" or "claims." In a 3-year scientific investigation, the majority found that, when they took Ovaltine regularly at bedtime, they definitely felt more refreshed in the morning.

For the sake of your health, your nerves, and particularly your appearance—why not try taking the new, improved Ovaltine regularly—begin tonight? See if it doesn't help you to wake up feeling far fresher in the mornings.

SPEAKING OF PICTURES . . .

. . . THESE ARE FEININGER'S SHADOWGRAMS

Three years ago Andreas Feininger, a commercial photographer, plucked a feather from his pillow and in a free moment photographed its shadow. Pleased by the feather's comely features, he soon began photographing other objects with equally interesting shapes as a hobby.

Shown here are recent samples of his work. Those on the left-hand page are straight close-ups of ordinary objects which are distinguished by a sharp sense of detail. Those shown on the right-hand page are not regular photographs but shadowgrams. Derived from a hobby, these strange patterns might well serve commercially as new designs for wallpaper and textile materials. The trick in taking a shadowgram is not to use a camera. Instead, the object—usually a leaf, a flower or a seed—is placed directly in an enlarger, above a sheet of sensitized paper or diapositive plate. When the light is turned on in the enlarger, the shadow of the object is immediately printed on the paper or plate. The result will be a white shadow on a black

A further variation on this theme is to solarize the shadowgram. In this case a shadowgram is printed and then re-exposed briefly to the light. All the shadows which were originally white now turn gray at the edges, like the shadow of the leaves in top row below.

O.K., Connie! But first... check up on your breath!

Connie, like so many others, has bad breath and doesn't know it.
That's the tragedy of this common fault—you rarely suspect it in yourself.

Yet dentists say ...

"Tests show that 9 out of 10 people have bad breath. That's why dentists recommend Colgate Dental Cream. For Colgate's active penetrating foam gets into the hidden crevices between teeth ... helps clean out decaying food particles and stop the stagnant saliva odors that cause much bad breath."

See how much brighter your teeth are?
Feel that penetrating foam refreshing your whole mouth?
And don't you enjoy
Colgate's tangy flavor?
Such a pleasant way to combat bad breath!

"What do you mean ... Coffee that fits your Coffee Pot?"

"Why, dear, that's the secret of the flavor you've just been complimenting. You'd never dream of buying stockings or gloves without giving the size . . . and it's every bit as necessary when ordering coffee. One or two grinds of coffee can't possibly fit all coffee pots—and when you get the wrong-sized grind you lose a good deal of the flavor that you have paid for."

"That certainly makes sense, Alice, but where do you get this

A NEBRASKA DIPLOMAT IN PARAGUAY

by JOHN NEILL

Asunción, Paraguay

Findley Howard has gone home. He packed his trunks, bade farewell to a host of friends, threw out the last evidence of conviviality in the Legation and departed for his native Columbus, Neb.

Paraguay grieved to see him go.

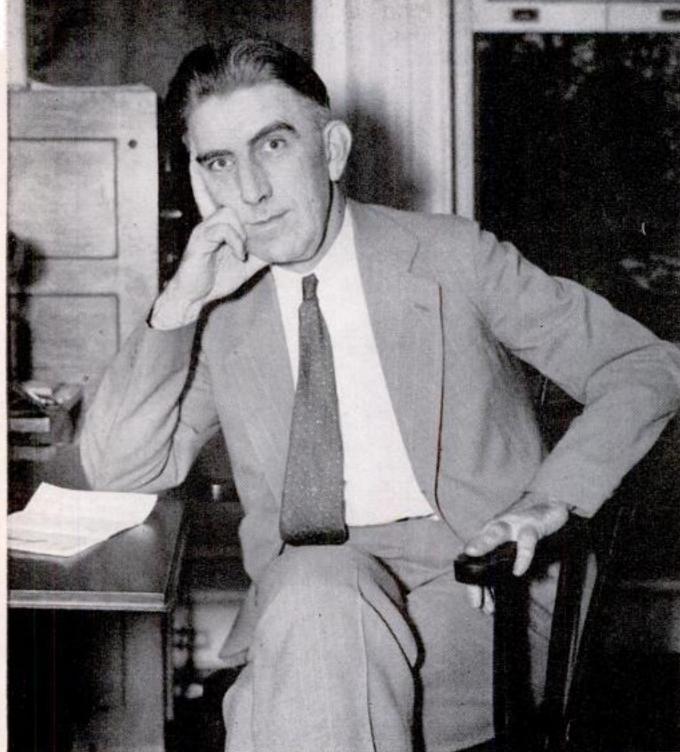

Findley Howard has been, for the last five years, U. S. Minister to the Republic of Paraguay. A widower, he made the Legation a single man's paradise. Piled up in every room his visitors saw cases of Scotch, some full, some half empty, with bottles obviously taken at random. The Minister, in accord with tropical custom, frowned on serious drinking before noon, and during the morning confined himself to a pink liquid identified by some visitors as pink gin, by others as Lavoris. Whatever it was, he found it very tonic and restorative.

After noon, however, whisky was de rigeur. To avoid needless movement and shouting, Howard hit upon the idea of having an Indian servant follow him around at all times with a tray bearing Scotch, soda and ice. He had only to reach out a hand for a drink.

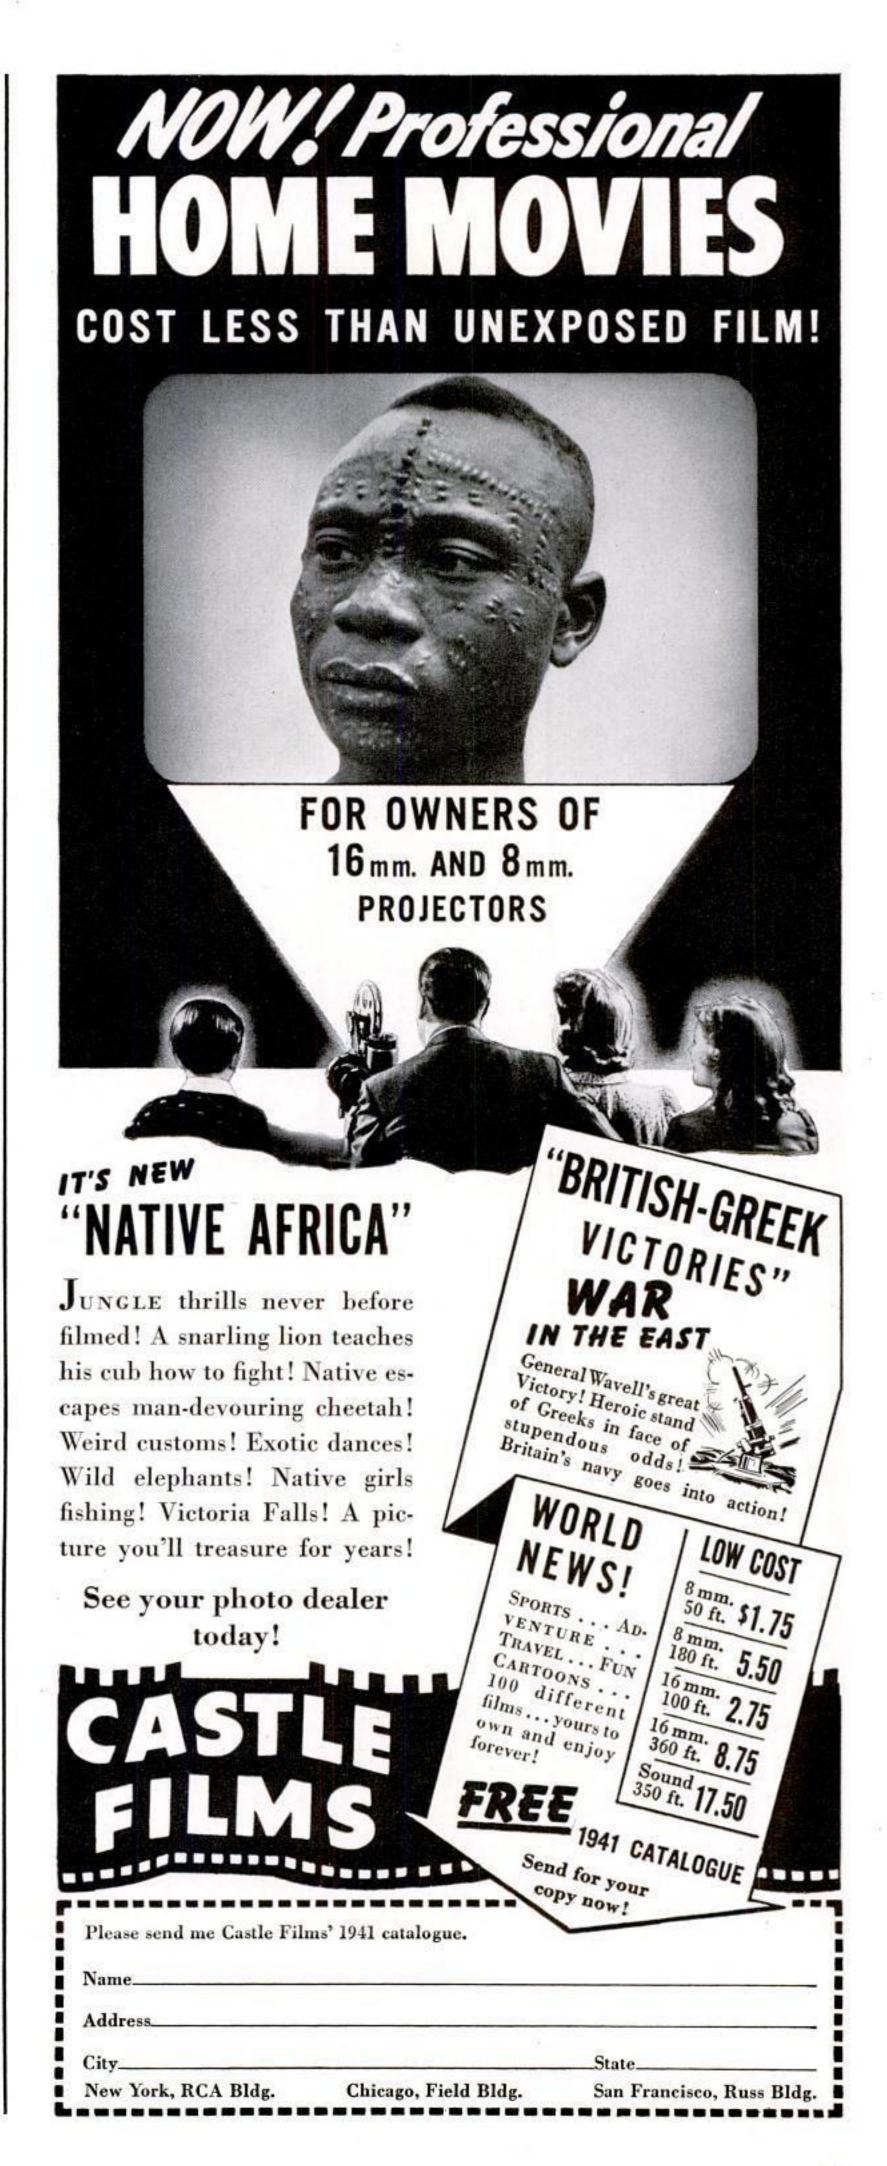

In food, too, the Minister had a one-track mind. His dish, day after day, was canned tongue, imported from the U. S. Howard employed a good cook and set a varied table for guests. As for himself, he didn't care much about eating and when he was alone it seemed simplest to settle on tongue.

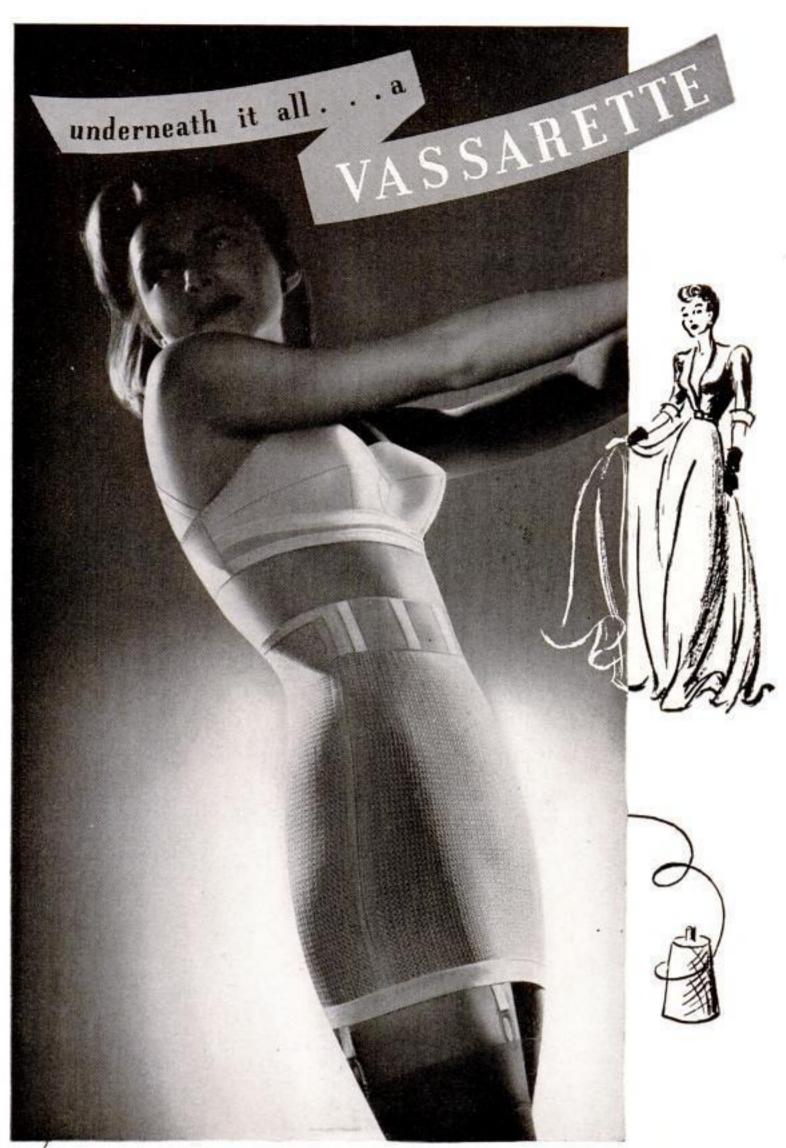

It gets steaming hot in Asunción and when the weather became too much for him, Howard was wont to discard clothing as a needless bother. Another odd habit which impressed guests was his morning game of solitaire. After breakfast the Minister would proceed in state to the Legation bathroom where there was set up a card table with a deck of cards and a glass of the invariable pink liquid. Here the Minister would while away an hour before undertaking the arduous duties of the day.

When Howard, the son of a Nebraska newspaper publisher, first blew into town his Midwestern breeziness soon had the Paraguayans holding their hats. Some dignified citizens were jarred by his habit of strolling into the pompous Union Club and clapping them on the shoulder with a genial "Hi ya, Toots." But as they came to recognize his keen business sense, his straightshooting and his political understanding, they decided that if this was Yankee style they liked it.

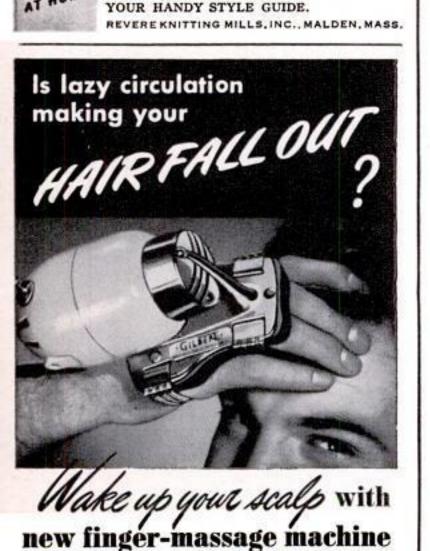

What really won the Paraguayans was the Minister's fantastic courage during a Paraguayan revolution. the story is reported, Howard donned his white linen suit and sun helmet and insisted on going himself through the bulletwhistling streets to the cable office to report to Washington. He refused to let any married member of the Embassy staff accompany him, saying of himself, "Hell, as far as my kids are concerned, with insurance I'm worth more dead than alive anyway." He added, grinning: "Mind you, nobedy is a greater coward than Findley Howard; but nobody is a braver man than the U. S. Minister." He strolled down the main street toward a spitting machine gun, which miraculously missed him, turned it one side with his walking stick and said: "Sonny, you'll hurt somebody with that thing, and wouldn't it be embarrassing if it were the U.S. Minister?"

At the cable office, they told him that no outgoing cables were permitted. "I'm the U. S. Minister," began Howard, sitting down very firmly, "and I'm going to send my cable to Washington." With repetition, suasion, threats and general carryings-on, he finally tired them out. His was the only diplomatic cable accepted.

One great success was his annual Fourth of July party. The entertainment fund of such a Ministerial post as Asunción is less than $1,000 a year and Howard quickly decided that that was just enough for one good party. His choice of July Fourth was particularly happy because that happens to be a great holiday in Paraguay too and many of his guests took it as a special compliment to their country.

Howard never allowed his drinking to interfere with his work and could stick to iced tea when he had to. Many officials, furthermore, found that a few Scotch-and-sodas with

AMERICAN LEGATION, ASUNCIÓN

Howard at the Union Club had more effect on their tongues than on Howard's ears. "I often thought," mused one of them, "that he sometimes pretended a mellowness which had no basis in fact."

Howard was a close friend of Colonel José Felix Estigarribia, the hero of the Chaco War who became Paraguay's great president. Those in the know feel that the Chaco Peace Conference, which the U.S. and five other nations sponsored at Buenos Aires, would never have been such a success had it not been for the work Howard did behind the scenes. The Paraguayans, cocky at military successes, reputedly would not accept the very generous offer of the arbitration commission until Howard got Estigarribia's ear. Estigarribia, rushing to Buenos Aires and replacing a negotiator by himself, forced the settlement. Later Howard played the major role in getting from the U.S. unlimited credit for Paraguay that helped cushion the shock of post-Chaco War demobilization.

His influence was reputedly resented by the German Embassy, so strongly indeed that Estigarribia got the notion (probably quite unfounded) that the Germans were "out to get" Howard. Estigarribia passed the word that if Howard had an "accident," 200 Germans would have similar ones.

Paraguay had a change of government seven months ago and the new crowd showed a dislike for Howard. This government is run by the Army set and does not have the same dislike for the Germans that Estigarribia had. The Government's antagonism toward Howard probably had something to do with his leaving Paraguay.

It was Minister Howard's practice to meet every distinguished visitor at the Asunción airport, with practically the entire Legation staff, in an antediluvian Packard and, if the visitor was a bachelor, to invite him forthwith to stay at the Legation. The Packard of late has provided more honor than transportation. A recent visitor reports two blowouts and one puncture on the drive to the Legation. "I'm going home soon," said the Minister wistfully, "and they won't want this car. So why the hell should I spend money on tires?"

If he was sorry to go, he was nevertheless glad of the prospect of getting back with his two children, a boy 17 years old and a girl 13, who have been staying with an aunt in Columbus, Neb. Howard lives for these kids, whose mother died when they were small children, and does everything for them so that, as he gruffly states, they will be better persons than he is.

There are many hundreds of Paraguayans of every class, from cabinet ministers down, who sincerely miss "El Ministro Cowboy." Said one: "He was an odd man, but we accepted him as he was and grew to love him. And Paraguay owes more to him than Paraguay could ever with dignity admit."

HOW TO RETIRE AT 55 ON A LIFE INCOME OF $150 A MONTH

A story for Men who are now 40 or younger

T COULD hardly believe it. "You L say that man used to run a bakery out West?"

My friend nodded. "His name is Barnes. He came down here to Florida about six months ago. And he's been having the time of his life ever since."

That was easy to see. The man we had been observing was dressed in comfortable, knockabout clothes; his face was tanned; his eyes twinkled. As we fell silent we could hear him talking to his friends.

". . . sure, and I'm having that tarpon mounted. It'll be ready when my wife and I get back from the picnic."

I turned to my friend. "Lucky devil, to be down here retired for life, through with money worries at his age. He must have inherited a fortune."

"You're wrong about the fortune," my friend said. "I've heard his story, and he didn't inherit any money. He's retired on a life income from an insurance company-$150 a month as long as he lives. Come over and meet him."

You don't have to be rich

So I met Barnes that day. Later I got a chance to talk to him at length.

"You can retire as easily as I did," said Mr. Barnes. "You don't have to have a lot of money in the bank. It doesn't matter how much you're worth. The important thing is to start while you're still young. How old are you now?"

I told him I was 40.

"That's fine," he said. "Now listen. When I was your age I was discouraged. My bakery was doing all right and the money was coming in, but I wasn't getting anywhere. I wanted security and didn't have it. I wanted freedom to enjoy life, and didn't have it.

"Then one day I heard about the Phoenix Mutual Plan. I realized then what an opportunity I had been passing up. For this Plan was just what I needed. By investing a portion of my earnings in it, I could guarantee myself a life income, beginning at 55! This income meant the end of business worries. It meant life-long security, freedom to do the things I wanted to do.

An Income for your wife

"In addition, the Plan assured my wife a life income if I died before retirement age. And it guaranteed me a disability income if, before 55, power for six months or more.

"So I began using the Plan. Old worries began to slip away. I was on the right track and I knew it. Today, at 55, I have the things I want. Each month the postman hands me a check for $150, and I'll get another $150 every month as long as I live.

"People ask me, 'Is it enough?' As a matter of fact, they'd be amazed at what a person can do on $150 a month when he retires. I tell them, 'Don't ask whether it's enough - ask what I'd ever do without it!""

Here's Why Mercury's Difference Is More Than Skin Deep!

in Mercury start with its very conception. • There's no other car like Mercury because it's actually designed and built with more power per pound than most other automo-

Smooth, flowing lines alone don't like a greyhound as contrasted to a St. Bernard. For Mercury construction eliminates superfluous weight and drag. • That's why Mercury steps out front and stays there in any kind of going. That's why it's so alert and responsive in traffic, biles. • In fleetness, it stands out so swift and sure on the highway.

Mercury Always Rides A"Tail Wind"!

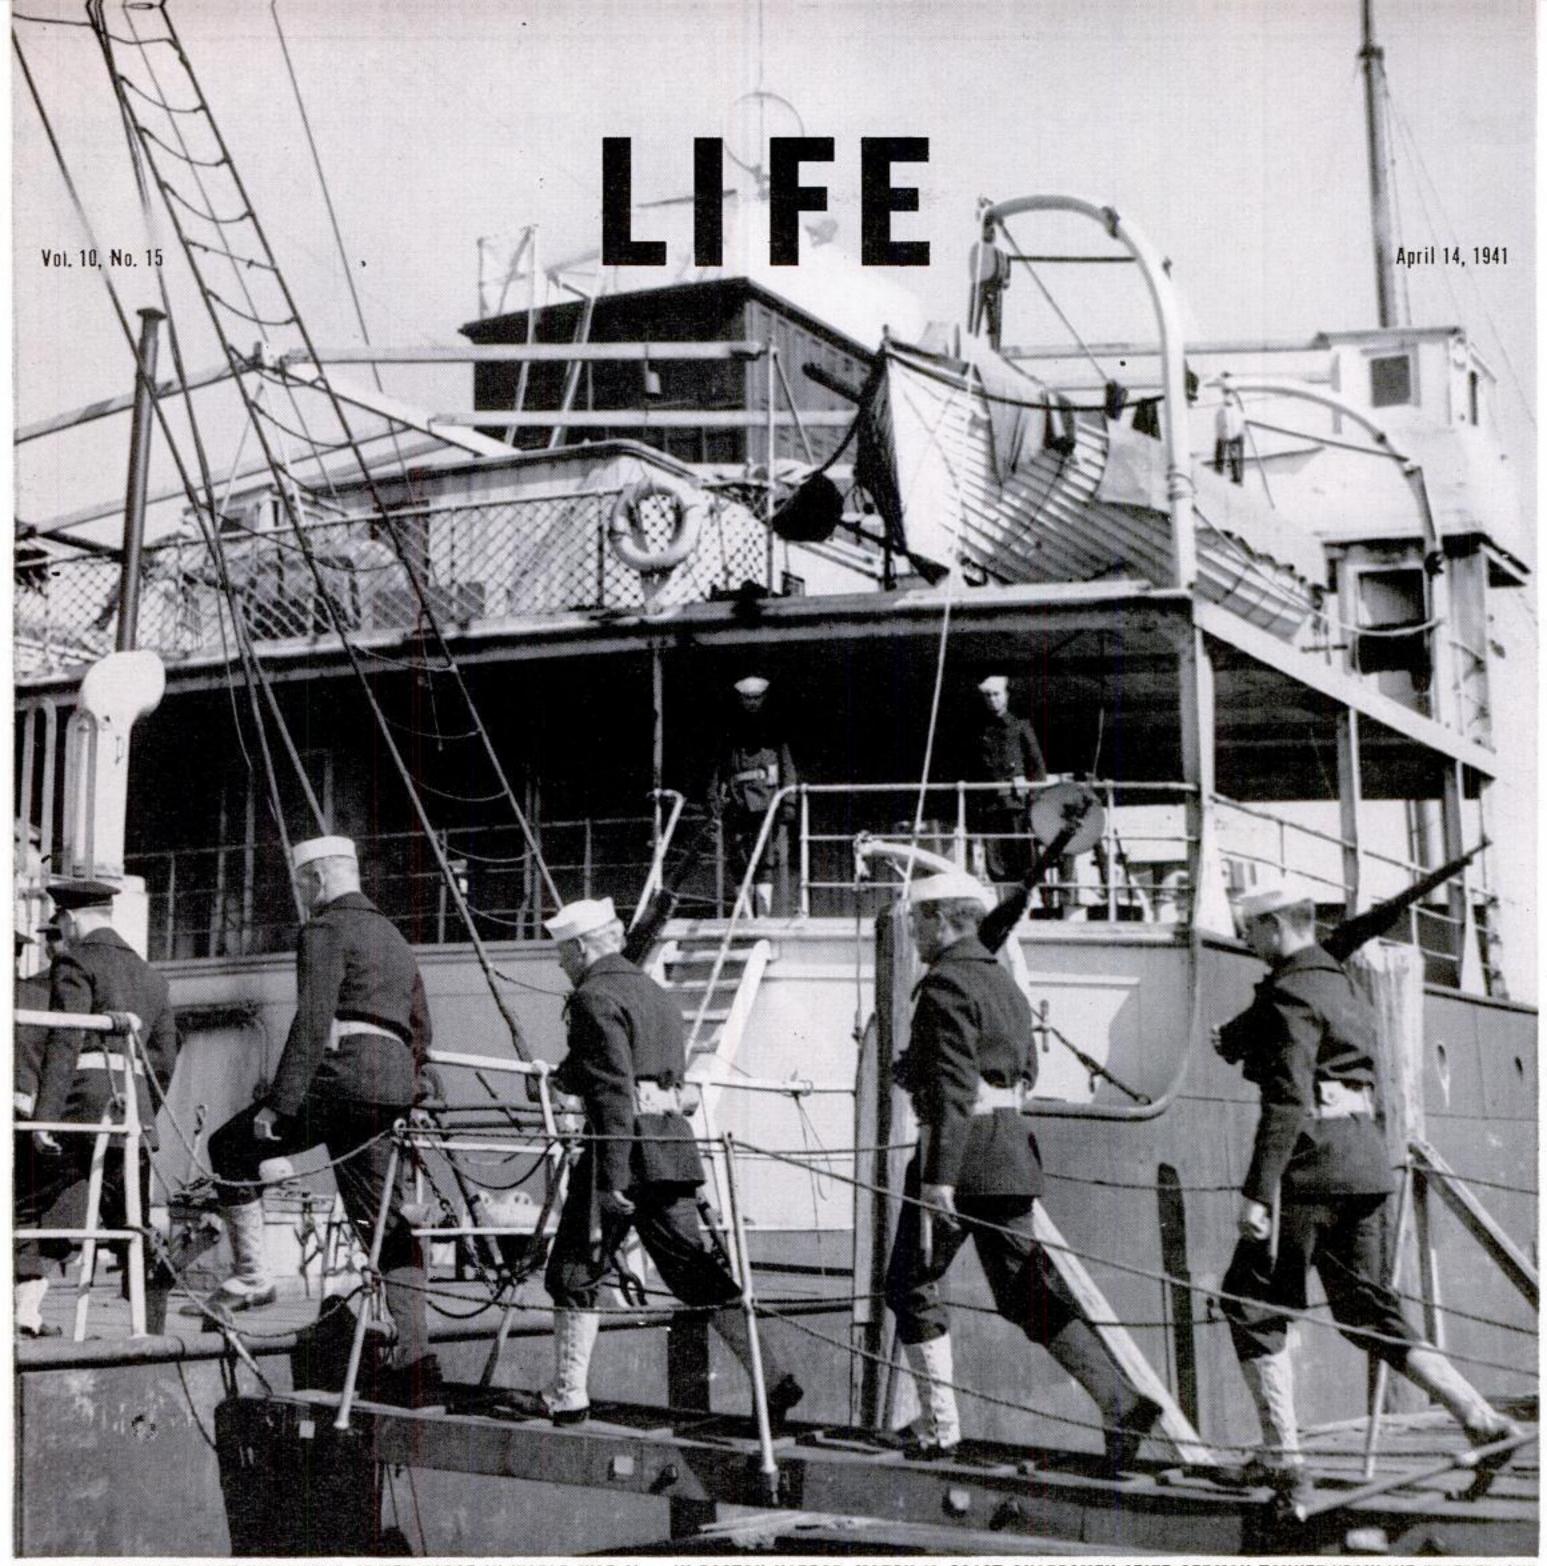

• HERE'S SMARTNESS AND YOUTH IN A CONVERTIBLE - a new all-weather 5-passenger Mercury. Automatic top is raised or lowered electrically, at the touch of a button. Tailored seat cushions and backs, in your choice of tan, blue or red hand-buffed leather. Olive-drab or black fabric top with matched edgings, optional. Large luggage space. White sidewall tires extra.

When Mercury streaks down the highway and sweeps around curves, you get the feel of riding a tail wind. For the tremendous get-up-and-go of this spirited, youthful car whisks you along without a whisper of labored effort. Precision balance and favorable ratio of power-to-weight put it way out front and keep it there.

Nation-wide records show that no other automobile in its field ever made friends so fast. Here's a car that everybody likes on sight-a trim, exciting beauty, alive with the power and vitality of a V-8 engine that's thriftier than many sixes. Here's a big car, too, inside and out, with plenty of head room, leg room, elbow room . . . yet it's so nimble and responsive that it seems to drive itself. . New, wider tires and equalized weight distribution give Mercury better road grip-sure-footed stability on curves and slippery highways. Long, gentle, slow-motion springs and doubleacting shock absorbers provide a brand new kind of motoring comfort. • And for all Mercury's fleetness and power, owners report up to 20 miles per gallon on gas! Drive a Mercury for yourself. You'll get a brand new thrill at the wheel of this vastly different kind of car!

HERE YOU SEE THE FIRST USE OF U. S. ARMED FORCE IN WORLD WAR II. IN BOSTON HARBOR, MARCH 30, COAST GUARDSMEN SEIZE GERMAN TANKER "PAULINE FRIEDERICH"

U.S. USES FIRST FORCE TO WIN BLOODLESS VICTORY IN BATTLE OF THE ATLANTIC

In the winter of 1916-17 Teddy Roosevelt, Albert Bushnell Hart and other interventionists of that bygone day strenuously urged the U. S. Government to seize and make use of the 109 German merchant ships then lying at refuge in U. S. harbors. The ships were much needed, but President Wilson held back. Careful of the forms of neutrality, he feared the seizure might rouse the Kaiser to declare war. Not until the U. S. itself had formally declared war on Germany did U. S. armed forces, on April 6, 1917, pounce on the German ships.

The difference between President Roosevelt and President Wilson, and between U. S. "neutrality" of 1941 and that of 1917, was dramatically illustrated on March 30. Out from Washington went an order, approved by the President from the cruising Potomac. In 21 U. S. harbors from Portland, Me., to Grays Harbor, Wash. and south to the Canal Zone, Coast Guardsmen and soldiers armed with rifles and machine guns swiftly boarded 28 Italian, two German and 35 Danish merchant ships, carted their crews off to immigration stations or jails. In the Battle of the Atlantic, the U. S. had won a bloodless victory. The only show of resistance, a mild one, was by Italian crewmen at Jacksonville, Fla.

It was a historic act: the first use of U. S. armed force in World War II. Six months ago it would have been a screaming sensation throughout the land. Last week, significantly, the public reaction was one of general satisfaction, mingled with mild vexation that the thing had not been done sooner. Legal excuse for doing it now was a tip-off that the Italian and German crews had begun to sabotage their ships. The Espionage Act of 1917 authorizes seizure to prevent such action. Official explanation of the seizures of Danish ships, whose crews welcomed the invaders and were shortly allowed to go back aboard their undamaged ships, was that their ships might shortly have been sabotaged by "other crews."

Legal or not, the U.S. move was tough stuff and recognized as such by the Axis press which screamed "piracy" and "Wild West." That U. S. officials had fully made up their minds to get tough and stay that way was shown by Secretary Hull's stiff rejection of German and Italian diplomats' protests, by preparations to prosecute guilty Italian and German crewmen for sabotage, by a stiff Hull note ordering the Italian naval attaché in Washington, Admiral Alberto Lais, out of the country for having ordered his countrymen's acts of sabotage. Whether the seized ships would be turned over directly to Britain, or used by the U.S. in place of American ships to be turned over to Britain, remained officially unannounced. But Secretary Hull did not leave many citizens guessing when, in answer to questions about the ships' disposal, he reminded reporters that the U. S. policy is still all aid to Britain short of war.

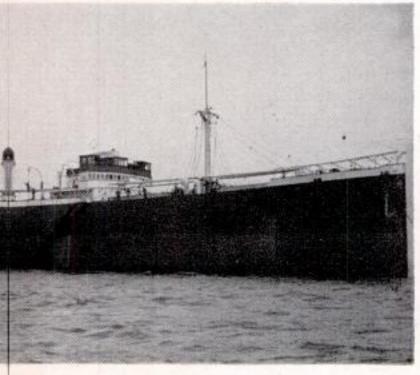

THESE ARE 45 OF THE 69 GERMAN, ITALIAN AND DANISH SHIPS SEIZED BY

THE U.S. GOVERNMENT. TOTAL TONNAGE: 296,615

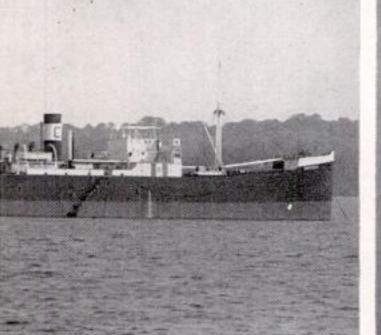

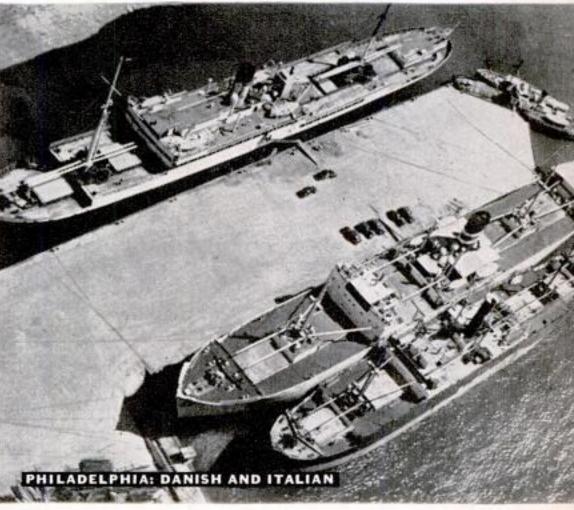

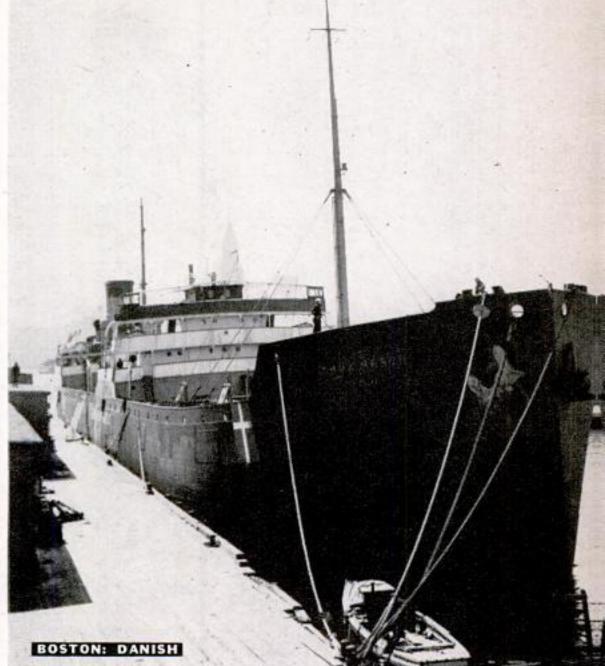

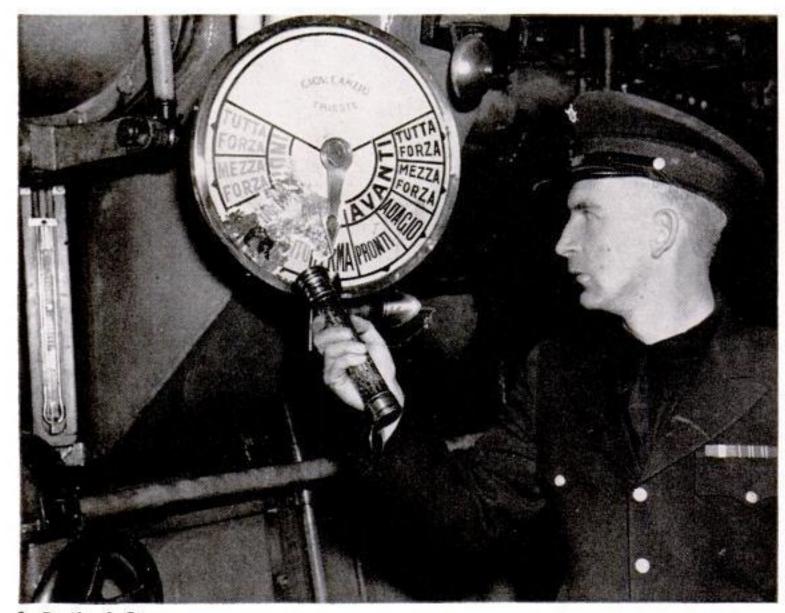

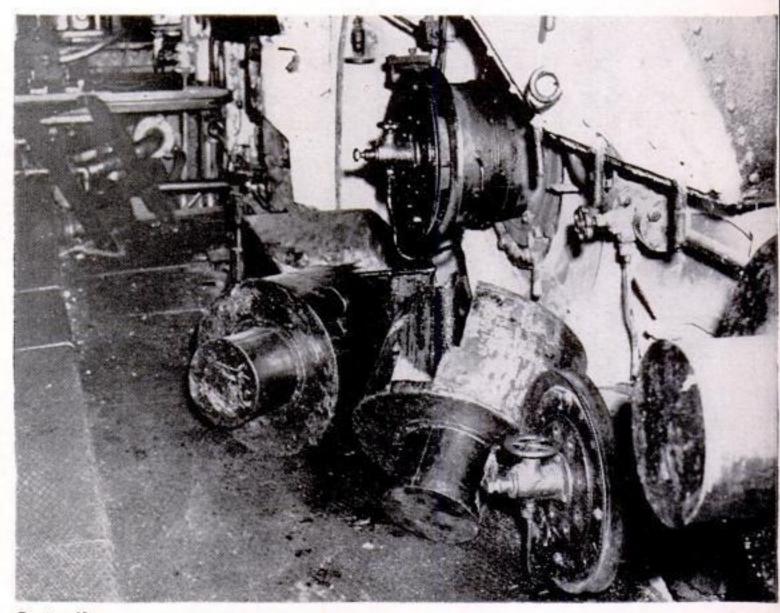

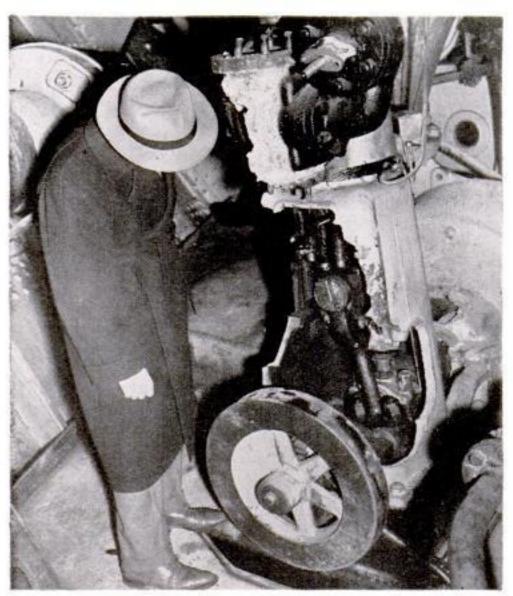

ONE GERMAN CREW DID THOROUGH WRECKING JOB BUT ITALIANS BUNGLED SABOTAGE

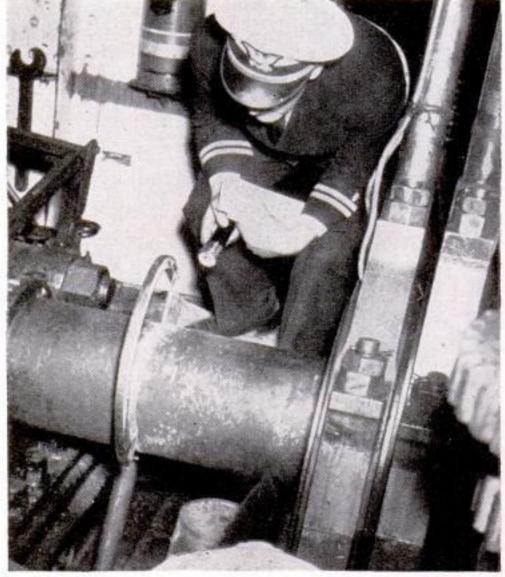

In Portland, Ore. the crew of the Italian motorship Leme smashed main engine telegraph and did other damage by tricking U. S. Marshal's guards placed on ship months ago in libel action.

Pretending to give their engines a trial workout, Leme crewmen put emery dust in the bearings and cylinders, dropped jagged pieces of iron in gear boxes, did the best Italian job of sabotage.

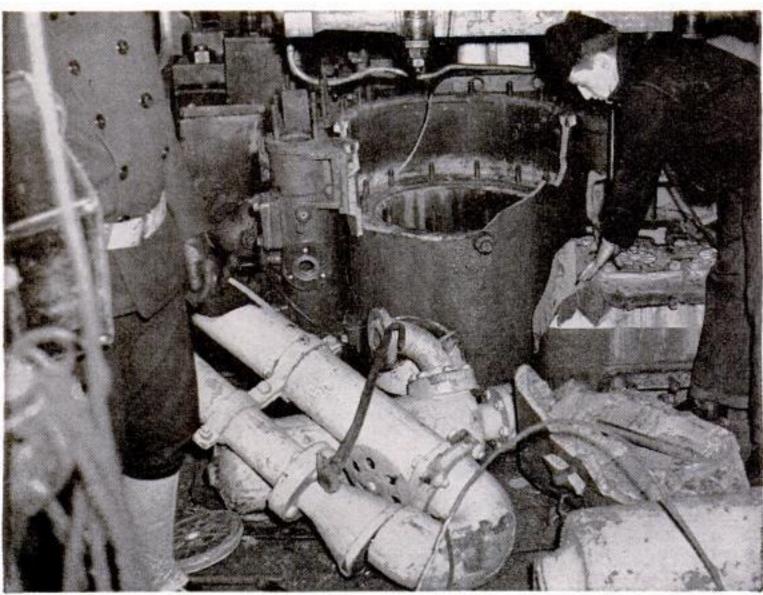

In Boston its crew thoroughly wrecked German tanker Pauline Friederich. Above: remains of a smashed converter pump.

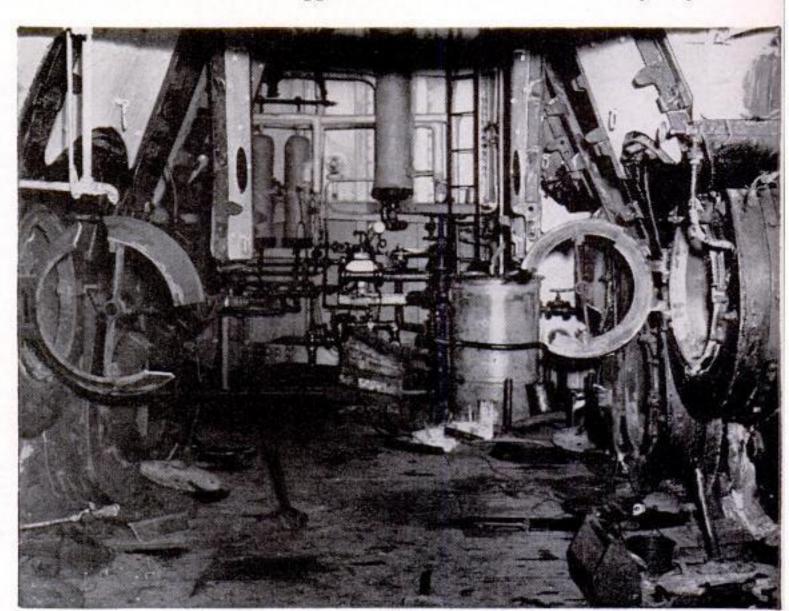

In New Orleans crewman of Italian Ada O. had nearly hacksawed a 14-in, crankshaft in two when the Guardsmen arrived.

In Newark, N. J. boarding Coast Guardsmen found the reversing gear wheel of Italian Alberta burned off by acetylene torch.

The main air pump and attached circulating pump cylinder barrels and valve chest of Italian Alberta were well sledge-hammered. The penalty for sabotage is $10,000 fine, 20 years in prison.

In San Juan, Puerto Rico the Italian Colorado was docked in the San Antonio channel in shadow of 10th U. S. Naval District headquarters, but its crew managed to wreck engines anyway.

AND THEIR CRAFTS CAN BE REFITTED FOR SERVICE IN ATLANTIC "BRIDGE OF SHIPS"

Scuttled off Costa Rica, a German and an Italian freighter are burned by their crews March 31 to escape seizure. Other German freighters were burned last week in Peru, Ecuador, Venezuela.

The crew of the 4,645-ton tanker Pauline Friederich, lying in Boston harbor, displayed customary German efficiency in their sabotage job. Armed with sledge hammers, hacksaws and acetylene torches, they had made an almost complete wreck of their ship before Coast Guardsmen got aboard. Except for the boilers, every piece of machinery was smashed beyond repair. Estimating the damage at $800,000, marine engineers figured that to refit the ship would cost three times what it was worth.

The Italians, on the other hand, were no more efficient and successful than they have been in Albania and Africa. As may be seen on the opposite page, they managed to create a considerable litter, but it was announced that every one of the 25 ships they tried to wreck (three were untouched) could readily be repaired. This compares with the performance of the German crewmen who sabotaged every one of the 109 ships laid up in U. S. harbors in 1917. All 109 seized in April had been repaired and put in U. S. service by December. Total tonnage of the ships seized last week was 296,615, or about enough to replace Britain's shipping losses in an average month.

Presumably because a Coast Guard sentry had been put aboard their ship when the Potomac anchored beside it during President Roosevelt's fishing trip, the crew of the German freighter Arauca, which was chased into Port Everglades, Fla. by a British cruiser last year during its maiden voyage, were nabbed before they could do any damage to their ship. Some of their comrades to the south had better luck, as Latin America began following the U. S. lead. Of 56 Italian and 40 German ships tied up in Latin America, by last week's end ten had been burned up by their crews to escape seizure.

"Alle umdrehen!" (Everybody turn around) was captain's order when a cameraman appeared at Broward County, Fla. jail. These are the Arauca crewmen who, when President Roosevelt's Potomac anchored beside them on March 21, impudently lowered their small swastika flag and broke out a big one. Seized crewmen will probably be jailed or interned for duration of war.

Hitler launches his Balkan offensive against Yugoslavia, Greece and the British Army

The date was April 6. The day was Sunday. The hour was dawn. And to the surprise of practically nobody Adolf Hitler put the German Army he had been collecting in the Balkans into motion against Yugoslavia and Greece. War was declared by a Berlin broadcast in which everything was blamed on British intrigue. As in Poland and the Low Countries, the Nazi air force led off the attack by bombing airdromes and bridges in Belgrade. The German General Headquarters claimed initial successes all along the line—except in the Struma River valley leading to Salonika, where the Greeks were reported putting up notable resistance.

Thus, as the Balkan war got going, Adolf Hitler found himself doing something he had promised his people for eight years they would never have to do —fight on two fronts. He had hoped to engulf the Balkans by the threat of sheer might and had seemed on the verge of success when the doughty Serbs suddenly reversed the position of Yugoslavia, kicked out the Regency for young King Peter II, turned their backs on the Axis pact and put up their fists. After that Hitler had to march or back down.

The Nazi tactics in leading up to the attack followed the familiar pattern set in Czechoslovakia and Poland. The German press and radio railed against the Serbs, accused them of beating German residents and burning their homes. Vainly Berlin sought to drive a wedge between the Serbs and the Croats but when Vladimir Matchek, the venerable Croat leader, joined the Simovich Cabinet as Vice Premier, Yugoslavia stood united. Loyally, Matchek ordered the Croats to follow the orders of the Serb-dominated Yugoslav Army, which had swiftly mobilized and taken over highways and railroads and cars.

To meet the attack Yugoslavia relied on her own fierce fighting men and what aid could be given by General Wavell's Army, now transferred from Egypt to Greece. For the long pull, three other factors stiffened the Yugoslav spirit. One was the promise of general Balkan support implied in the suicide of Premier Count Paul Teleki of Hungary, who killed himself rather than hand over Hungary as a base for the German attack on Yugoslavia. Another was a treaty of friendship with Soviet Russia, announced only a few hours before the German invasion. This treaty meant, at the least, that Russia is now openly opposed to the wiping out of a Balkan front through German victory.

Third and best spirit stiffener for the Yugoslavs was President Roosevelt's twice-given promise of aid. The Simovich Government has a stronger moral claim on U. S. aid than any other country because the coup d'état which put it in power was accomplished with the blessing, if not the active connivance, of the U. S. State Department.

Another special tie was formed between the U. S. and Yugoslavia just before the attack when a foreign woman was allowed for the first time to join the secret society of Serb patriots called Chetniks. She was Ruth Mitchell, sister of America's late Brigadier General "Billy" Mitchell. In a peasant hut near Belgrade, where the skeleton of a Chetnik hero lay in a corner, Ruth Mitchell was handed a phial of poison and a black fur hat with a silver skull-and-crossbones emblem. Then she watched her name struck off a list. "We just cross the name off, my girl," said Kosta Pechanatz, Chetnik leader, "because we consider you dead when you become one of us."

Grey's Elegy. A spluttering Vesuvius is monocled Charles Grey Grey, present editor of the authoritative semi-official book Jane's All the World's Aircraft. For years he has heaped lava upon American and British aviation, lauded Italian and German. Often he referred to "the civilized world and America."

Last week in the new 1940 edition of Jane's, Grey wrote: "The United States have decided to support the war 'to the last Englishman.'" Promptly the British press howled, the Ministry of Aircraft Production disayowed all connection with the book, and its publishers announced the insult would be deleted and all copies in circulation recovered if possible. To many it seemed that as a journalist Grey had written his own elegy.

Matsuoka's Journey. Last week Japanese Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka began his homeward journey after having visited Moscow, Berlin, Rome. From Hitler he had heard about the anti-Axis Yugoslav revolt. From Mussolini he had heard how the Italian Navy had suffered the greatest defeat in modern times.

Far from having signed any new commitments with the Rome-Berlin Axis, Matsuoka limited himself to a formal telegram sent to Il Duce: "I am convinced that the great Italian nation under your great leadership will emerge victoriously from the war."

Matsuoka should reach Tokyo in time to learn about the Anglo-American naval staff talks which were held for the first time in Manila last week.

Unhappy Landing. A terrible wind blew across Florida on April 3, whipped seas and swamps into a fury. Near Vero Beach, 125 miles north of Miami, the big wind caught up with an Eastern Air Lines transport plane carrying 13 passengers, among them famed surgeon Dr. George Crile. A vicious downdraft caught the plane. At 300 ft. the pilot heroically pulled out of the dive, was caught by another downdraft. Handling the plane superbly, the pilot landed right side up in a marsh. No passenger was fatally injured. Fourteen hours later, rescuers came in frog-hunting boats. Said one passenger: "We definitely didn't sing like they do in shipwrecks."

Action and More Action. Home from his fishing trip, President Roosevelt began revealing a few details about Lease-Lend action. A group of modernized 75mm. field guns, he announced, was bound for Greece -along with other unnamed arms. On April 1 he reported that he had already allocated $1,080,000,000 of the $7,000,000,000, to buy war supplies for Britain and at least one other country. Three days later he came up with news that a half-billion dollars worth of existing U. S. arms had been released for shipment to Britain & friends, that another half-billion dollars had been allocated to build 212 cargo ships, 56 new shipways to build them on, and new ship repair docks. The President also announced that he might soon lift combat-zone restrictions to let U. S. ships carry cargo to the British as far as Suez via the Red Sea.

Meantime, as the nation waited breathlessly for the great decisive next step of U. S. action, rumors seethed persistently through Washington that it had already been taken—that U. S. warships were already convoying cargo boats halfway across the Atlantic.

The Brothers Camacho. President Manuel Avila Camacho of Mexico, who last week signed a pact providing for reciprocal use by Mexico and the U. S. of each other's airfields, has two brothers.

Last week he had trouble with both of them. Elder Brother General Maximino, now in Baltimore having his ulcerated stomach examined, was annoyed because the pact had been signed in nearby Washington without his presence. Younger Brother Gabriel shot and killed an influential Mexican in a barroom brawl following a political argument. Promptly and judiciously Manuel had had his younger brother arrested.

PICTURE OF THE WEEK

The darkest hour in modern English history was probably the last week in May 1940, when the whole British Expeditionary Force seemed on the verge of destruction on the continent. Their allies gone or going, Britain turned to the greatest ally of all in a national Day of Prayer for Protestant, Catholic, Jew and Moslem, on May 26. A week later, nearly the entire British Army on the continent escaped from Dunkirk.

Dark with waiting was the month of March 1941, and the King called a fourth National Day of Prayer on March 23. On the opposite page a wounded member of the R. A. F. presents his hopes to God. In the week that followed, Yugoslavia amazingly defied Germany, the British armies sewed up the Italian East African Empire and the British Navy won the brilliant victory of Cape Matapan.

FORD STRIKERS PILE INTO A NON-UNION TIMEKEEPER AS HE ENTERS PLANT, BELABOR HIM WITH FISTS AND CLUBS.

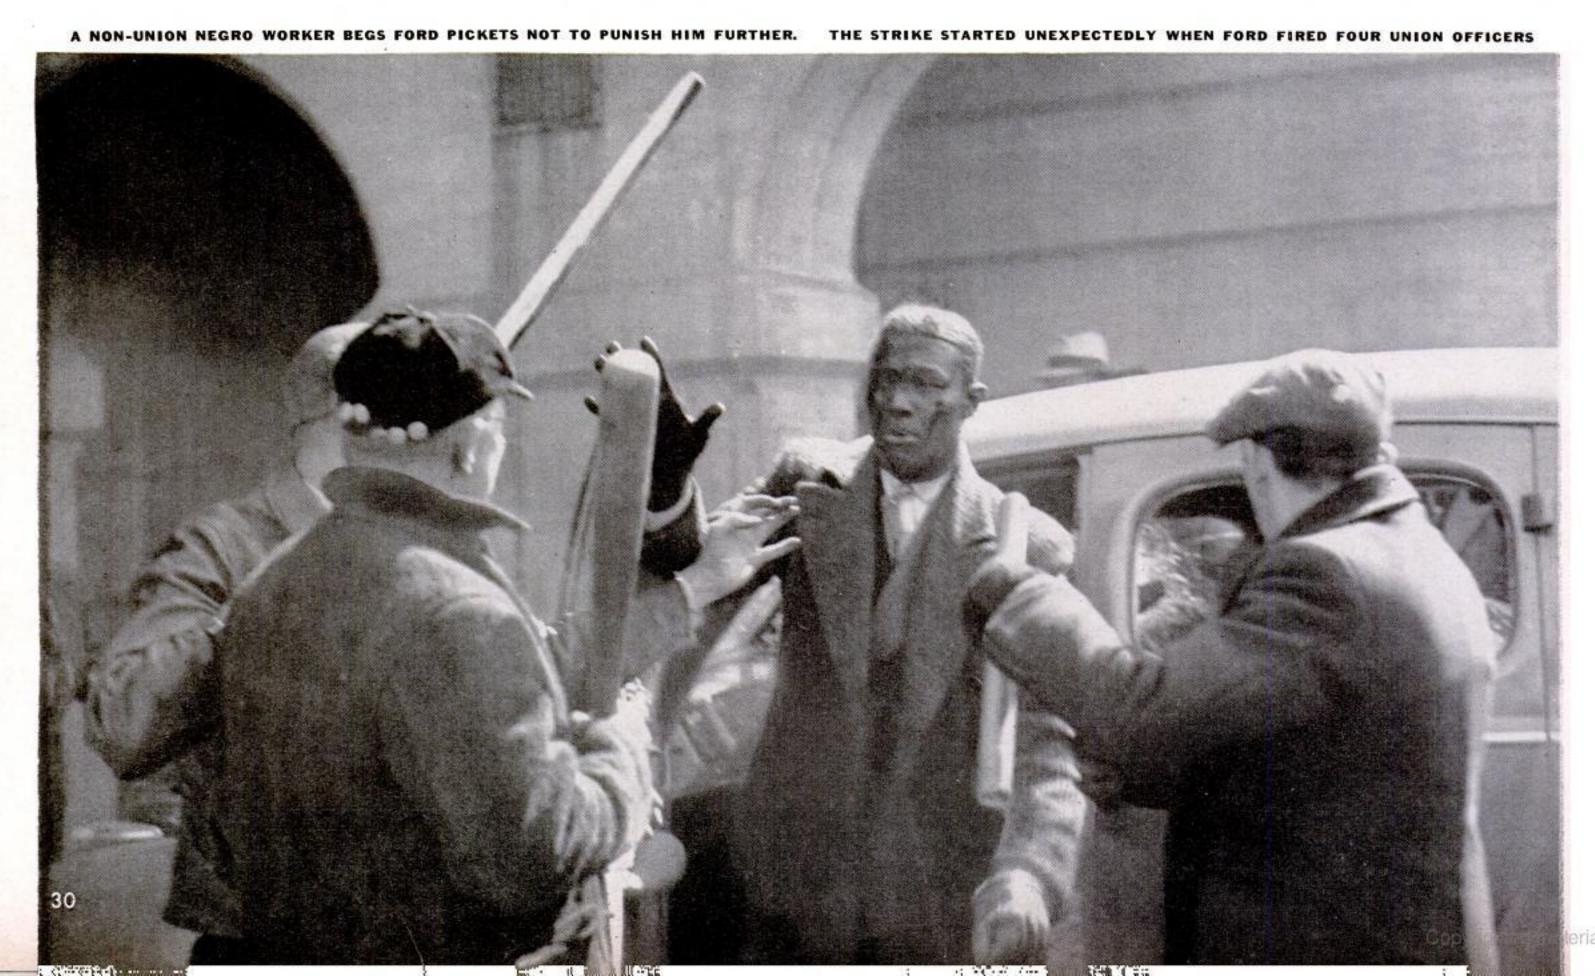

MORE THAN 75 WERE INJURED IN FIRST DAY'S BATTLE

NEW STRIKE BATTLES BRING THREAT OF FEDERAL ACTION

In Washington April 4, President Roosevelt let it be known that the nation's industrial disorders might soon reach a point calling for more forcible government action. With the Army, Navy and half the world crying for American arms, it was intolerable that production should be any longer impaired. The International Harvester and Bethlehem strikes (LIFE, April 7) had ended, but as their men went back to work, new thousands walked out of the biggest, most anti-union industrial establishment in the world, Henry Ford's plant on the River Rouge. By April 5, 34 other Ford plants and 125,000 Ford workers were idle. Over 400,000 soft coal miners were on strike in 11 States. And the grim Allis-Chalmers conflict dragged on into its 11th week.

The President made it clear he considered the Allis-

Chalmers strike the most serious in the country today, partly because of its length, partly because the most critical of defense orders were involved. He would give the National Defense Mediation Board few more days to find a settlement. What measures he would take in the event of failure he did not say. Three days earlier Governor Julius Heil of Wisconsin had besought Allis-Chalmers workers to resume their jobs. They listened to him respectfully, but when he entered the plant they wrecked his car and fought Milwaukee police for the second successive day.

Battles at River Rouge were even bloodier. There violence, begotten of past violence, raged furiously about the gates. Strikers belabored non-strikers as they quit the night shift of April 1. Inside, 1,500 non-strikers, mostly Negroes, forged 6-ft. swords and iron bludgeons in preparation for a sortie, then sat down and refused to emerge. Some rampaged through the grounds in new automobiles, tractors and combat cars. Ford spokesmen charged that Communists inspired the strike and were smashing aircraft tools and dies. The United Auto Workers denied both charges. By the week's end violence had slackened and Federal conciliators saw hope of peace within a few days.

HAYS OFFICE CRACKS DOWN ON CINEMA'S SWEATER SET

In Hollywood April 2, studio heads bowed to a new edict from the Hays office, though they well knew its enforcement might nip in the bud the career of many an outstanding starlet. To every producer went a disquieting letter from Joseph I. Breen, chief arbiter and custodian of the nation's movie morals. Wrote Mr. Breen:

"In recent months we have noticed a marked tendency to inject into motion pictures shots of low-cut dresses which expose women's breasts, as well as 'sweater shots'—shots in which the breasts of women are clearly outlined and emphasized.

"All such shots are in direct violation of the Production

NO Off duty, Betty Hill, singer and bit player, is free to barge about in any sweater she chooses. But this model would never get by the Hays office.

The self-same Betty Hill swathes herself in an approved "Sloppy Joe" sweater, effectively obscuring any points to which Mr. Breen might take exception.

MAYBE Hot arguments may arise over borderline cases like this. Here Betty Hill's midriff is bared, but her distinctive bustline is screened by heavy yarn.

NO Maria Montez, Latin-American starlet, is prominent member of Hollywood's so-called sweater set.

NO June Preisser, agile dancer, performs well in any attire. But sweaters give her an aspect of bouncing good health.

Brenda Joyce has ably filled out every role studios have assigned her. The Breen ban should not affect her career.

Code, which states clearly that the more intimate parts of the human body must be fully covered at all times, and that they should not be clearly and unmistakably outlined by the garment. . . . In the future any shots in which women's breasts are partially or wholly exposed or any 'sweater shots' in which the breasts are clearly defined will be rejected. This is important. . . ."

Far less specific and more inhibiting in its sweeping admonition than previous Hays office rulings, Mr. Breen's letter left movie-makers wondering: a) what to do with their up-and-coming sweater girls, and b) how to de-limit and define improper pectoral geometry. There was little reason, however, to believe that Hollywood's action would create any anxiety in the nation's principal group of sweater-wearers—i.e. college girls, who as a rule engulf themselves in sweaters several sizes too large for controversy (see below).

YES Yards of yarn envelop undergraduates at Wellesley, one of the nation's great sweater strongholds. A survey by economics students disclosed that the girls own an average of $10\frac{1}{2}$ sweaters per capita. But like most Eastern college girls, they wear sweaters far too large to agitate Mr. Breen. Underneath they usually wear blouses, bras or both.

THE BATTLE OF CAPE MATAPAN

BRITISH NAVY WINS BIGGEST NAVAL BATTLE OF THE WAR

Attempted lure of the Italian force toward British battleships by the British cruiser Orion succeeds for about three hours.

Night battle comes at 10:10 p.m. Three British battleships (foreground) stumble on three Italian cruisers (top). With their targets spotlighted by a destroyer, they swing broadside and fire, wrecking the Fiume and Zara, smashing the heavy cruiser Pola (left) already crippled by torpedoes and bombs. Italian torpedo charge (right) drives off British battleships.

In the pre-dawn hours of March 27, the Italian Eastern Mediterranean Fleet was brashly steaming eastward on German orders to get a British convoy to Greece and raid Suda Bay on Crete. It was promptly spotted by British submarines and planes and the British Fleet tore out of Alexandria that same afternoon. The Italians, depending primarily on landbased aircraft, were totally ignorant of the British approach, while British planes watched the Italians' every move. Their first and worst move was to split their fleet into two squadrons. The enemy fleets steamed toward one another all that day and night at the extraordinary speed of 20 knots. Next morning, as seen on the opposite page, their scouting forces made contact southeast of Cape Matapan in Greece from which the subsequent action takes its name.

British Admiral Sir Andrew Browne Cunningham on H. M. S. Warspite had sent his light cruiser forces ahead to try to lure the faster Italians in for battle. This worked for several hours Friday morning, as is shown in the detailed charts at the bottom of these pages. In this action, the overwhelming fire of the Italian battleship Vittorio Veneto and its heavy cruisers notably failed to scratch the luring light cruiser Orion. The game was up, however, when at 11:30 a.m. the Italians found the British battle line desperately close. Then the British aircraft carrier Formidable proved itself. Its torpedo bombers attacked the Vittorio Veneto (see drawing left) and its heavy cruisers at 11:30 a.m., 2:30 p.m. and at dusk. The oft-hit Vittorio Veneto turned tail after the first attack, limped back toward Taranto, and finally disappeared, presumably

The trap slowly closes from 8 a. m. to 11:30 a. m. when Vittorio Veneto, shelling Orion, senses the British battleships.

The climax of this sea fight came at 10 p.m. when the British battle line found the four Italian cruisers in the action shown above. The surprise was total. The destroyer Greyhound caught the heavy cruiser Fiume neatly in the beam of its searchlight at incredibly short range. Close behind (4,000 yd.) the 15-in. guns of the three British battleships, Warspite, Valiant and Barham, clouted the Fiume a dreadful swipe (see next page). The searchlights switched to the Zara and the same killing blow followed. At the same time the stern batteries polished off the Pola, which lay crippled by torpedoes off to port. The whole action took a trifle over four minutes.

At that moment Italian destroyers raced at the British behind a smoke screen, and launched a swarm of torpedoes. The battleships turned away, letting the torpedoes run past. Their batteries picked off at least two more destroyers. The job of sinking the three wrecked cruisers was left to the torpedoes of British destroyers, notably the Jervis (see above).

"It was not a battle," said an Italian sailor, "it was an Italian disaster." Lost: 3,000 Italians. Saved by British: 1,000 Italians. British losses: two planes. British had shown the supreme value of aircraft carriers, which the Italians do not use, of plane reconnaissance and torpedo bombers, and of heady night fighting. "Well done," Admiral Cunningham told his fleet.

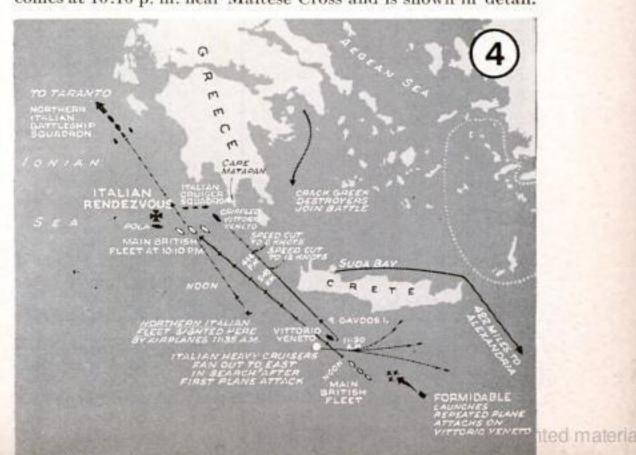

British torpedo planes break up the Veneto's shelling of British cruisers, force her to turn and run, as British Fleet approaches.

The chase of Italians by British runs into night. The real battle comes at 10:10 p. m. near Maltese Cross and is shown in detail.

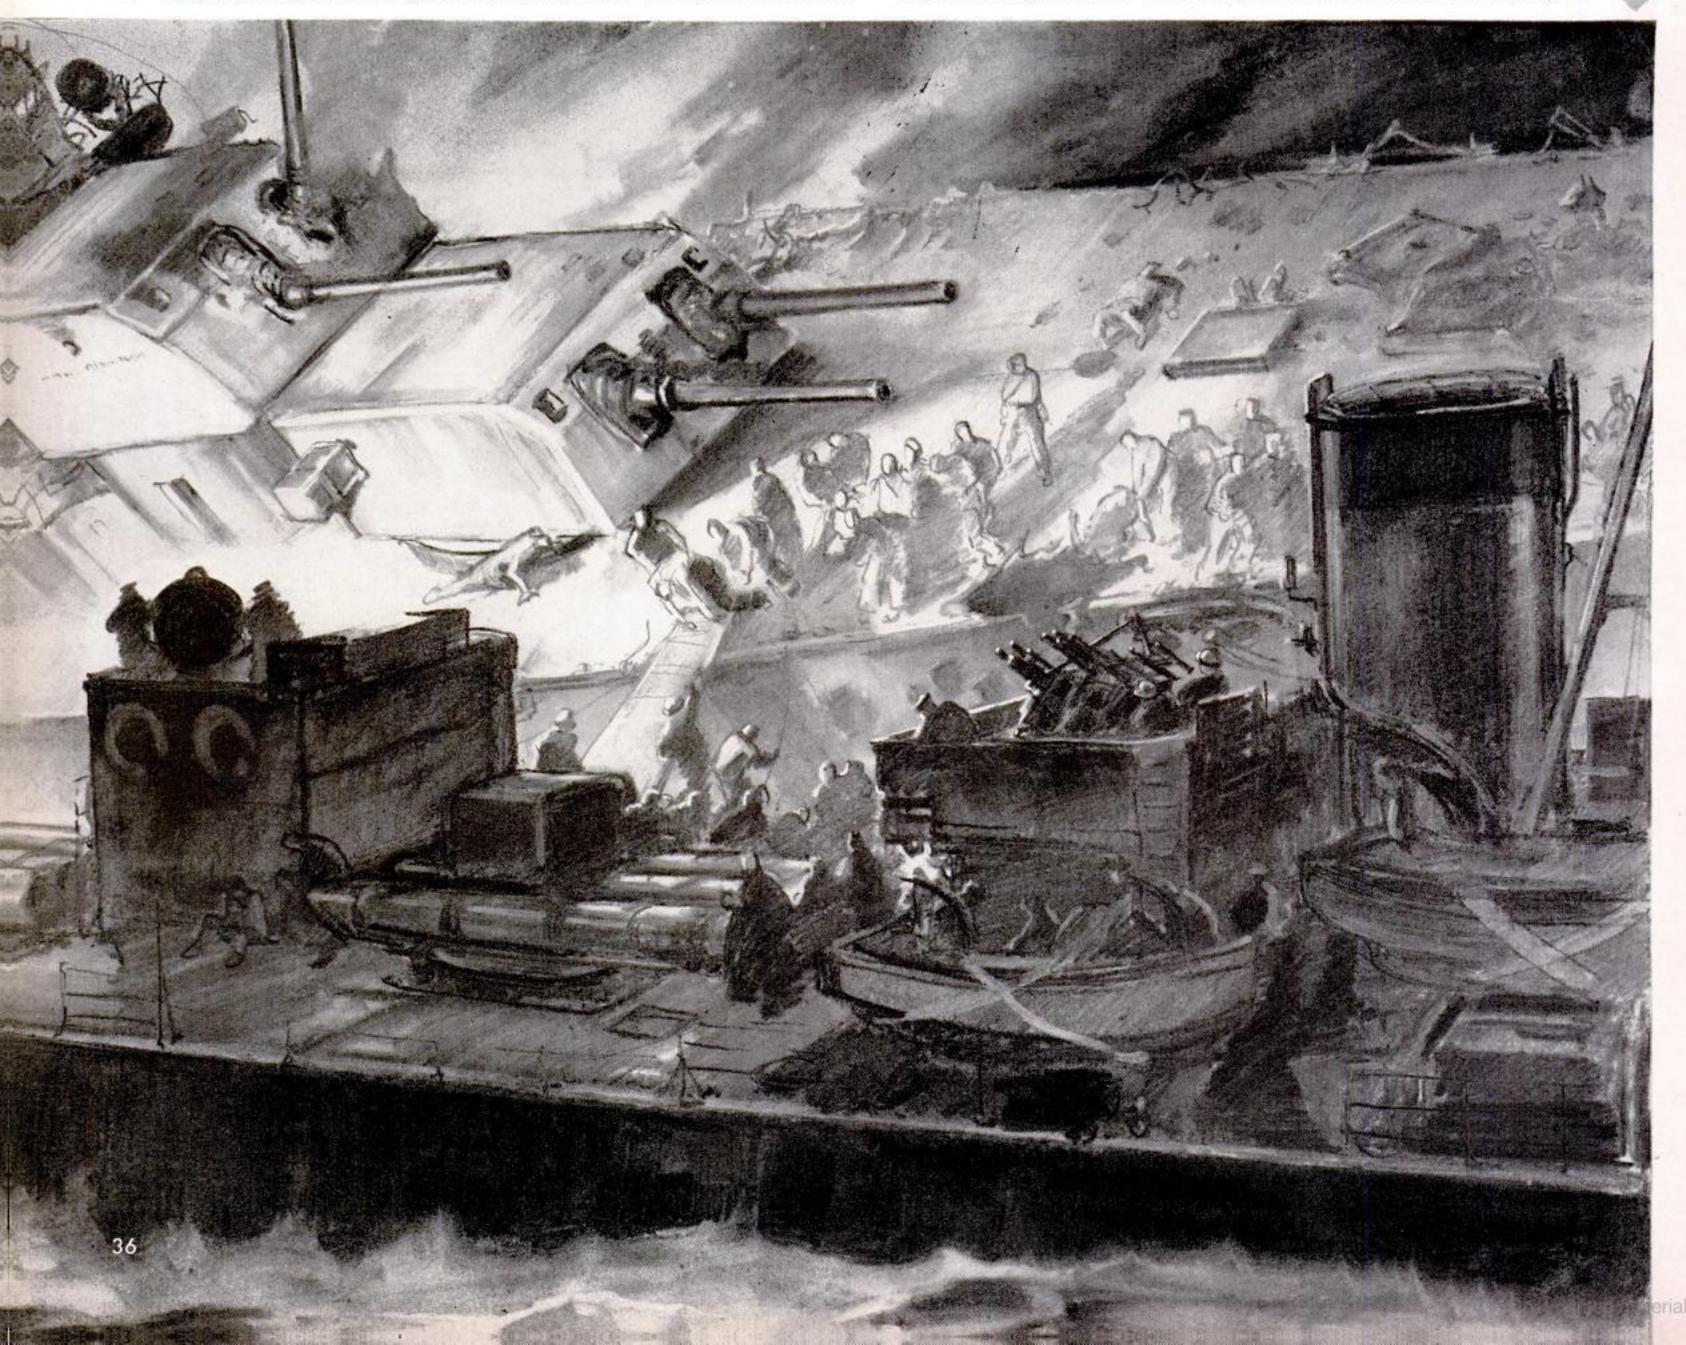

In black night off Cape Matapan, the British destroyer Greyhound's searchlight suddenly flashes full on Italian heavy cruiser Fiume. Above: whole 15-in. broadside of the three British battleships at close range hits Fiume, blowing up its 8-in. gun turrets, in a flash of flame described by Admiral Cunningham as "not a pleasant spectacle."

Rescue of 22 Italian officers and 236 men from the Italian heavy cruiser Pola (below), whose fire controls and engines have already been smashed by British torpedo bombers, is managed by British destroyer Jervis. An improvised gangway was thrown between the two quarterdecks. Then Jervis pulled away and sank Pola with a torpedo.

At inns along the highway, you'll see signs like this stop any number of cars. Just the words "Chicken Dinners" seem to make folks hungry! And that's natural, because chicken served in any form has long meant a favorite treat to American families.

Special feasts at home—such as on birthdays, or when company comes—are more than likely to include a chicken dish. Mothers know how eagerly chicken is welcomed. Roasted, or fried, or stewed, its delicious taste is one folks never seem to tire of!

In smart restaurants in town, too, chicken is one of the most popular and most-often-served foods. You can see it on the menu any day—Chicken à la king, Broiled Spring Chicken, Maryland Fried Chicken, and others. And you'll see it on many a table around you!

Read why we say:

SAFTI-FLIGHT WITH THE Safety Stripe Tread

LEADER OF A GREAT NEW LINE OF FISK TIRES

HERE, brief, clear, complete is the new tire story that's stopping tire buyers, tire sellers and tire makers right in their tracks. It's the fact-by-fact account, the up-to-the-minute biography of the new Fisk Safti-Flight tire with the Safety-Stripe Tread!

In the laboratory of the world's greatest producer of rubber, this new tire was born. Here, in 1940, day after day and night after night, Fisk tires were guillotined, bombed, crushed, tortured, run to death in a series of exhaustive tire tests unsurpassed in tire-making history. And in this inferno of blistered rubber and broken cords, a newer, safer, longer mileage tire was wrought and finished.

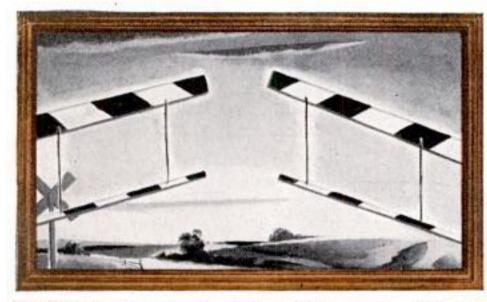

We gave this tire a new blowout-resisting body. Heat-resisting, pre-stretched cotton cords were cushioned and safti-sealed in pure latex. Ply on ply, from bead to breaker strip, we built a new carcass more immune to blowouts due to heat and impact.

We gave this tire a new longer-mileage tread. To the tougher, more flexible body of the masterpiece taking shape under our hands we bonded a denser, longer-wearing, and quick-stopping tread of specially compounded rubber that would give us more non-skid mileage.

We made this Fisk Safti-Flight tire with the Safety-Stripe Tread the leader in quick stops, in long mileage, in greater blowout protection...setting the standard for performance, setting the style for beauty.

Time to Re-tire Frade MARK REGISTERED U. S. PATENT OFFICE FRANCE STATES AND A SECOND STATES AND A SECOND

STOP! Inserts of soft white cushion rubber link together hundreds of tread blocks to form the Fisk Safety-Stripe Tread. As you step on the brake, each tread block grips the pavement, piles up against the next block in a continuous wedging, gripping action—shuts automatic safety gates against dangerous skids. These costly white Safety-Stripes are inlaid the full depth of the ribs for longer non-skid life.

LOOK to Fisk for protection against the intense heat inside the tire that causes ply separation, blowouts. Heat-treated in pure latex, Fisk plies of the new, stronger cotton cords resist this heat. And Fisk's flexible treadblock construction absorbs most road shocks before they can reach the tire body. (The Safti-Flight Super Rayon, at extra cost, runs even cooler, gives greater blowout protection—especially at high speeds.)

LISTEN! You'll hear no noise from this silent tread. In fact, you'll marvel at the cushioned ride. It's as smooth as flying. Here's why: the Fisk Safti-Flight gets the full air-cushioning effect out of the tire. The independent spring-action of each tread block absorbs small road bumps instead of transmitting the shock all along the tread...This absence of noise really tells you that you get more mileage, too.

BRITISH WAR PRISONERS

English officer sketches life inside one German prison camp

Some 38,000 Britons are now living in Germany. They had one brief taste of war, were captured and shut up in German prison camps for the duration. From one such camp, Oflag VII C (Oflag is short for Offizierslager or officers' camp), there arrived this handful of drawings by a British prisoner of war, Lieutenant John Fessenden Watton, 4th Border Regiment (Territorials). Done in pencil on a cheap memorandum pad, they are the first visual evidence on how the Germans treat British prisoners.

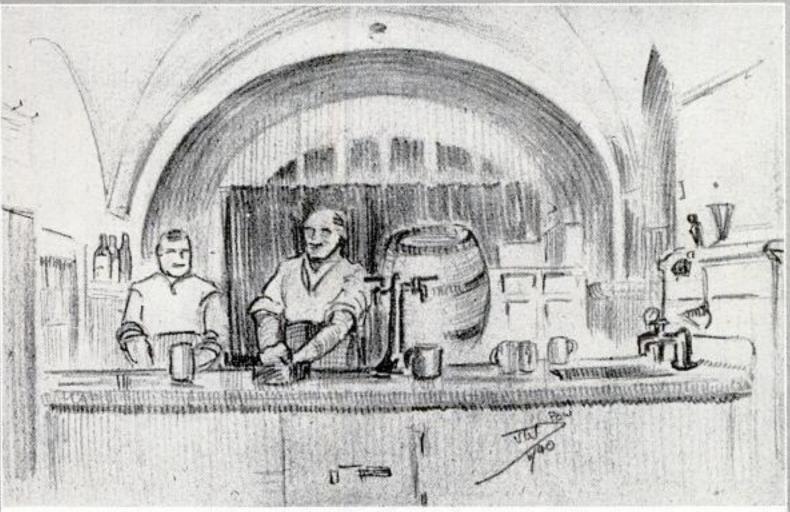

Lieutenant Watton and his companions of the 51st Division, fighting south of the Somme last June, were surrounded by the Germans and surrendered a week later only after their food and ammunition were all gone. Before the war Watton worked in the advertising department of the K

Shoe Co. He writes his father ambiguously, "It's a splendid education being here. Jove, but it'll be good to see you all again."

German prison life certainly is not as agreeable as Lieutenant Watton had to depict it to get these drawings out to his father past the Nazi censor, but it is a fact that British war prisoners are relatively well treated. The Germans have a great respect for the conventions of war, which include mutually decent treatment of prisoners. Furthermore, British now hold a good many German prisoners. French prisoners, not similarly protected, do not fare so well. The British demand rations more or less equal to those of German base troops, which is more than German civilians get. The British prisoners also get an average of 48,000 parcels from home a week.

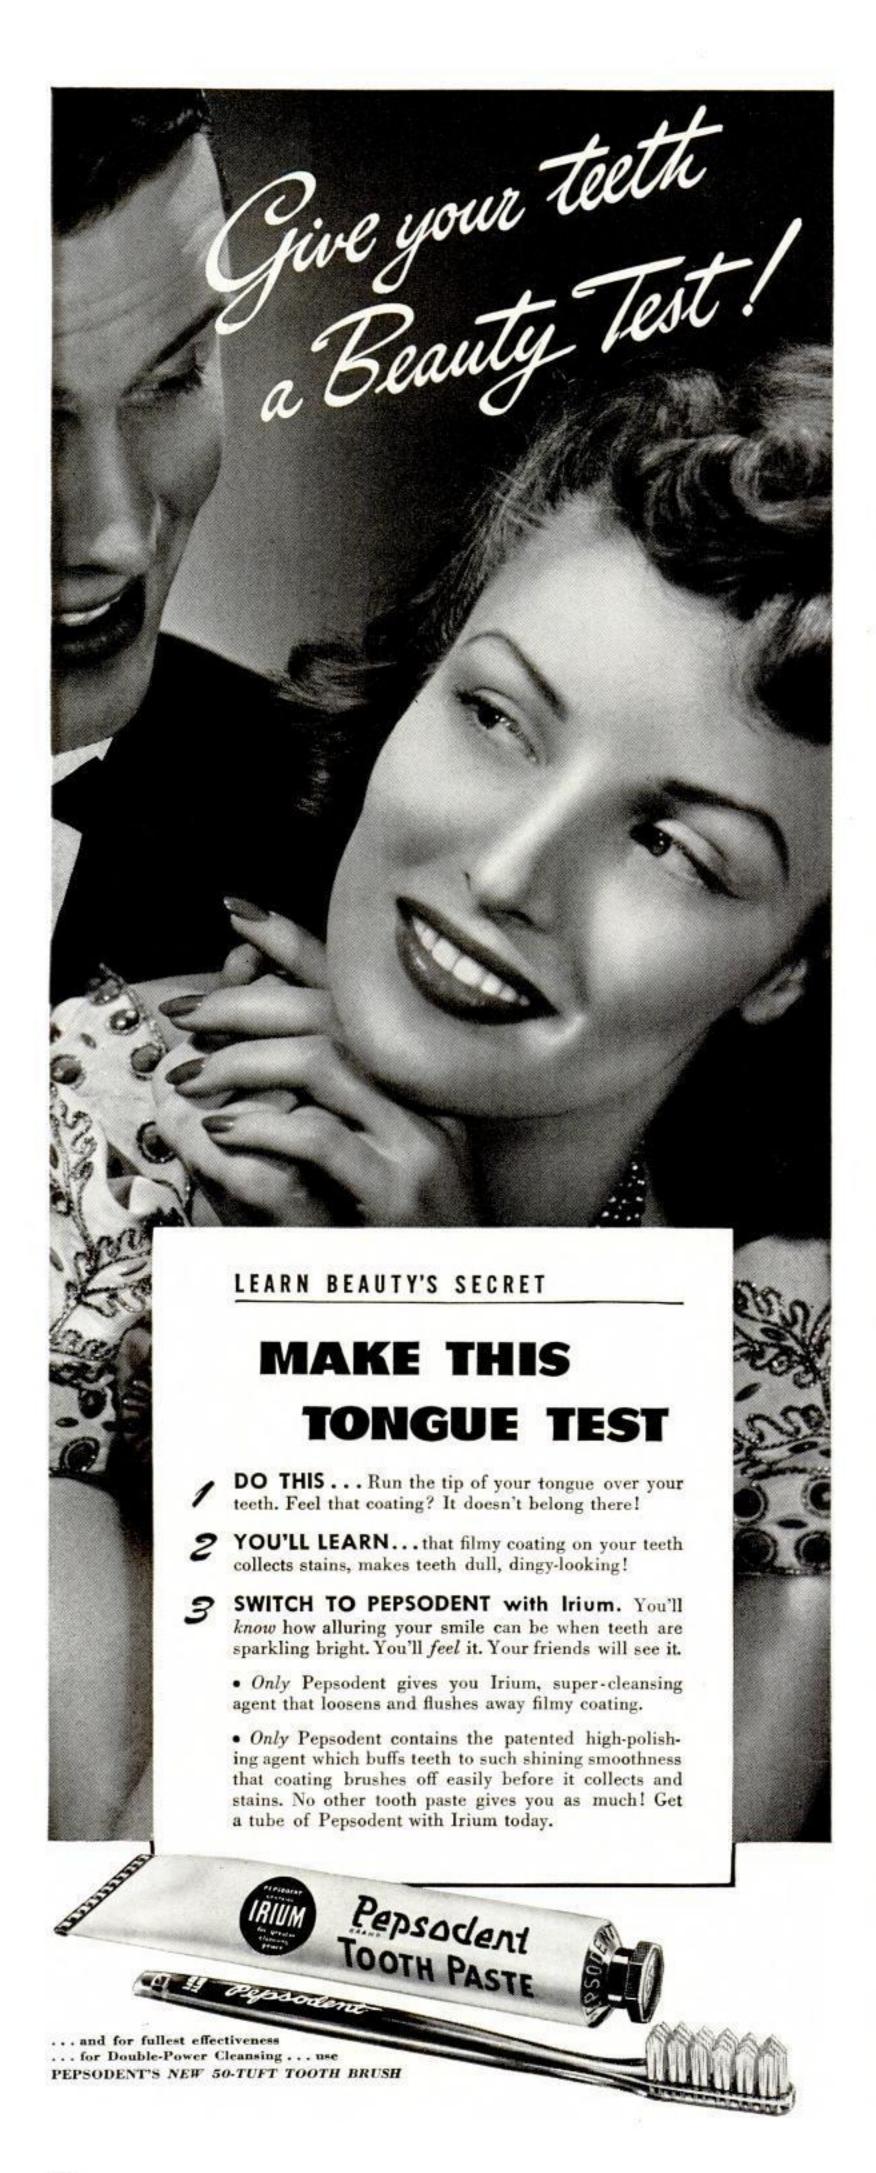

Regimental padre captured by Germans has stained-glass window in his room.

An excellent bar is permitted in this officers' prison camp which is probably in an old castle in Bavaria. The officers buy beer with allowances paid by the Germans, plus money from home.

Meals are at small tables in own rooms. Servants are captured British soldiers.

The cellar of the old Bavarian castle is the canteen for the British prisoners. A hallowed convention of war is to treat captured officers well.

Wooden bunk has been fixed up by this British officer. The worst curse of being captured is the long boredom, despair and futility of the life.

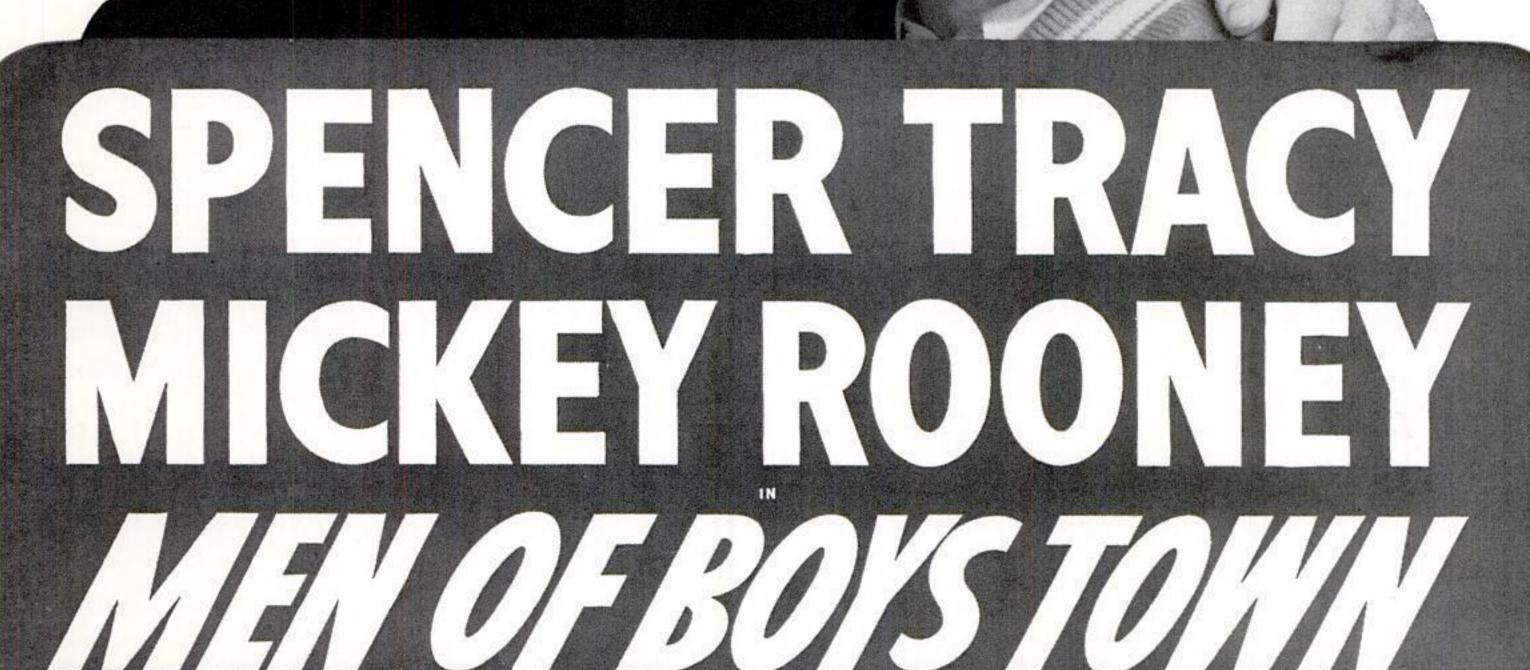

Exercise ground, as drawn by Lieutenant Watton, seems a pleasant park in castle courtyard. Notice helmeted German guard with rifle on wall.

"Are you sensible or sentimental?" asks Barbara Stanwyck

Barbara Stanwyck, whose vivacious acting adds champagne sparkle to Paramount's new picture, "The Lady Eve," has sound advice for April brides:

"If you're the type who follows her heart, I'm sure your choice will be 'First Love'!" says Miss Stanwyck. "The design is so feminine and beautiful—and goes so perfectly with every kind of table. "On the other hand, if you're the sensible, practical type—you'll still choose 'First Love!'

"It has qualities you rarely find in silverplate—a richness and height that give it the look of real, solid sterling.

"No matter what your type is—you must see 1847 Rogers Bros.'

What gives it this sterling look? What skills have been used to bring out that high ornamentation, that deeper etching, which have never before been found in any silverplate? The secret lies in a new technique—developed by 1847 Rogers Bros. and brought to exquisite perfection in their "First Love" pattern.

CADET FLYERS SHOW THEIR WINGS TO DEFENSE FILM STAR VERONICA LAKE

The cadets of the U. S. Army Air Corps have a new sweetheart. She is Veronica Lake, the tiny, slender girl with the sheaf of honey-colored hair who cuts a sultry swath through the aeronautic melodrama of Paramount's I Wanted Wings. Transported March 22 to Randolph Field near San Antonio, Texas for the world premiere of her movie, Veronica nicked the hearts of 1,000 future U. S. pilots and their officers.

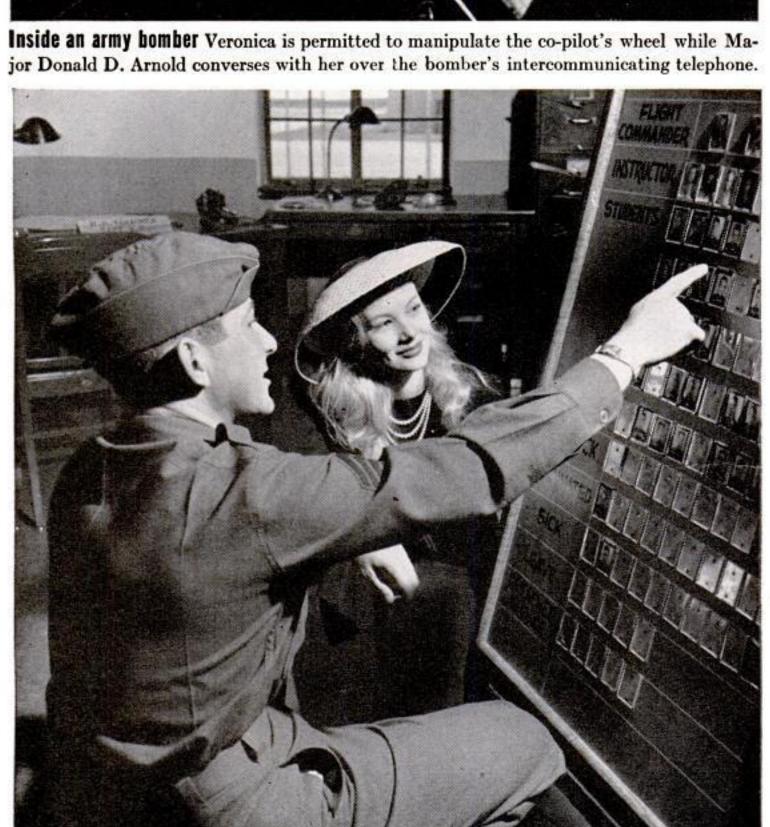

With 17,000 spectators gaping on the sidelines, she shook hands with General John J. Pershing and former Vice President Charles G. Dawes, watched 250 student flyers hedge-hop over the flat Texas prairie and danced with tongue-tied "dodoes" (new cadets) in the mess hall. Next day, after I Wanted Wings had reaped four-star reviews from critics as the defense program's first great aviation epic, Veronica was shown by the cadets through the airport's control towers and operations rooms, while LIFE Photographer Peter Stackpole recorded the proceedings with his camera. "What this country needs to recruit its 12,000 pilots a year," concluded Photographer Stackpole, "is a Veronica Lake in every airport."

I FLY BOMBERS TO BRITAIN

PILOTS IN SPORT COATS AND TEXAS BOOTS FERRY LOCKHEEDS ACROSS NORTH ATLANTIC

By AN AMERICAN PILOT

This article was written by a well-known American flyer whose name is being withheld at the request of the Canadian Government. Since 1926 he has flown over 500,000 miles in 16 types of planes, visiting almost every country in the world. Like the other Americans engaged in flying bombers across the Atlantic from Newfoundland to Britain, he is flying under contract as a civilian.

Across the wintry North Atlantic for the last four months a band of fliers, representing in nationality a small league of democratic nations, has been flying American bombers from Newfoundland to Britain. We hail from the U. S., England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Norway and Egypt. Among the Americans we have former cotton dusters, army and airline men and fliers who once flew bootlegged liquor into the States for a living. Three of the Americans now with us were flying commercial planes for T. A. C. A. in Costa Rica not long ago. Another American flew his stint for Loyalist Spain. The Egyptian pilot traveled three-quarters of the way around the world to join us.

Although we are flying the bombers that will help beat Hitler, most of us are soldiers of fortune. Besides expenses, American pilots are paid $1,000 a month, first officers $800, radio operators $600. Only the English seem particularly interested in the war and its aftermath, and as a topic of conversation Adolf Hitler runs a slow second to Hedy Lamarr. One American, no longer with us, used to wire up to $40 worth of orchids at a time to his numerous girls in Montreal.

Our job since November has been to fly Lockheed Hudson bombers across the Atlantic. Recently we have begun flying even bigger four-engined Consolidated B-24's. I was in the first flight of Lockheeds to England and am one of a number of pilots who have made two trips apiece, the top except for one pilot who has made three. By the time this appears, I too will have taken my third plane across.

Our first bomber flight across the Atlantic had few of the trappings of a historic event. As it had snowed earlier that day, we spent part of the morning clearing ice and snow off our planes while plows swept the great macadam surface of the main runway clean. Ground crews scurried around the planes, checked the two 1,200-h.p. engines and filled the two extra fuel tanks that each plane carried.

Then R. A. F. Captain Donald C. T. Bennett, in command of our flight in plane No. 1, called us together. He handed each pilot the latest weather reports. A flight plan and route were discussed and agreed upon. For purposes of identifying ourselves as British to each other, to other planes or to ships, each crew was handed a Véry pistol with a combination of variously colored flares to be changed at hourly intervals. Each plane likewise received its secret code number, which also changed hourly. As a result it is almost impossible for a German plane, ship or radio station to pass itself off as British by code or flare. In a last word Bennett cautioned us against flying over ships or towns lest we be fired on by mistake. Then, with a crisp "Thumbs Up! Good Luck," he ordered us to our planes.

At snow-swept Newfoundland base, twin-engined Lockheed Hudson bombing plane is parked behind a drift waiting for a break in the weather before being flown to Britain.

Comic relief was afforded by the sight of the pilots coming out to enplane. Our wool-lined leather flying suits had not yet arrived, and so each man dressed according to his own sartorial tastes. Some of the men wore business suits, others tweed sport jackets. One Australian wore a beaver hat and many men wore ski parkas. We looked as though we were heading for a costume ball instead of a transatlantic hop.

We did not know it then, but our take-off was not unattended. We were too busy inside our planes to see anything and the noise of our engines was too great to hear anything, but a 60-piece regimental band had come out to serenade us. They struck up Lead Kindly Light, which seems somewhat somber for the occasion.

We take off on the first flight

Bennett flashed his signal light and took off. At minute intervals the rest of us followed. At a pre-arranged height we leveled off, flying in a wide echelon formation. It was a relief to be off at last across the Big Pond I had been wanting to fly for years. "George"—the automatic Sperry gyropilot—flies us, but we were kept busy watching Bennett's tail lights, checking and logging 26 instruments every half hour, keeping radio and navigation logs in minute detail. A constant worry is checking to make certain that the remaining gasoline in our six tanks is equally distributed to help balance the plane.

About midway across we caught a "midnight snack" of tomato soup, coffee and chocolate bars. Occasionally we rested on a cot. Contrary to some fanciful accounts that have appeared, we do not fly in the stratosphere. At high altitudes we inhaled oxygen through rubber tubes in our mouths. The taste of the rubber was sickening and on the first trip I vomited three times. Now we use Mayo oxygen masks.

Five hours out, we ran into heavy clouds and everyone lost track of Bennett. It was every plane for itself the rest of the way, and our plane crossed the ocean first. Although we made bad time after land was sighted, we set an over-water transatlantic record of 8 hours and 57 minutes.

After delivering the bomber to Britain, I came back to Canada by boat. Soon we will be ferried back on transport planes and by summer, with better weather and more planes, each of us should be flying the Big Pond three or four times a month. Our greatest need is more pilots, navigators and radio men.

The huge base in Newfoundland

The base at Newfoundland is an airman's paradise. It is the world's greatest but least publicized airport, built within the last three years with an eye to its future use as a great peacetime transatlantic terminus. La Guardia Field would fit snugly into one corner of it. Five runways, each 5,000 ft. long and 1,200 ft. wide, spreadeagle the field in ten different directions. Guard lights flash along the runway borders and to help the pilot judge his distances the lights change color from amber to green every 1,000 ft. The Shell Oil Co. has done a remarkable job transporting and stocking great stores of the world's finest aviation gasoline at this distant outpost. We take off on 100 octane gasoline and cruise on 90 octane.

Although we do not live at the base, several days are usually spent there before we leave, waiting for a break in the weather. Last fall we slept in an old Pullman car and ate in a Pullman diner parked on a siding by the base. Our fare was helped out by Mrs. Robert Hayden, wife of the local Shell manager, who baked some of the best lemon meringue and pumpkin pies I have ever eaten.

Now we live in greater comfort in a one-story, 20-room wooden hotel, not far from the bar of the R. A. F. headquarters which is open two hours each day and where we can drink in moderation until 12 hours before flight time. At night American movies are shown in the R. A. F. officers' mess. One film that didn't take too well was South of the Border with Gene Autry, which seemed rather pale to a group of men who had just flown bombers to England. For other relaxation we hunt, listen to the radio, play cards, ping-pong and darts.

Wives are not allowed at the base, but one pilot stowed his wife aboard the bomber he flew up to the base from Montreal and when she arrived the authorities didn't know what to do with her. A few days later her husband piloted plane No. 5 on the second flight in which I took part. An hour out No. 5 developed engine trouble and turned back. I am still not certain whether the pilot was suffering from engine or heart trouble. The episode closed a few days later, however, when his wife returned to Montreal.

The most respected man in the outfit is 33-year-old, Australianborn Captain Bennett. He holds the world's long distance record for seaplanes—6,000 miles from Scotland to South Africa. He is a licensed pilot, navigator, engineer, radio operator and the author of some of the best aviation textbooks ever written. I have never known a better all-around flier. For the rest of us, flying the Atlantic is a new experience. An American overland commercial pilot flies on radio beams and is not required to know how to navigate by the sun and stars. But over the Atlantic, flying big ships at night over a northern route never before risked in winter, we fly entirely by dead reckoning or celestial navigation. There are no radio beams to guide us and we are only allowed to get bearings by radio as we near land.

To improve our skill, we attend classes in celestial navigation and the use of a sextant and practice blind flying in Link trainers between trips in Canada. It is not uncommon to see five or six of us on the roofs of Montreal hotels shooting the stars at night for practice. An American flier, with 500 hours to his credit, can learn more in a few months of transatlantic flying than in years of flying in the U. S. where celestial navigation is not required. I have come to know Polaris, Arcturus, Pollux and Sirius intimately. One star that I shall always gaze at with reverence is Betelgeuse, which we affectionately call "Beetle Juice."

Our Lockheeds are fitted with every imaginable safety device, including flotation gear. By pressing a button, a door in the cabin pops off and an inflated four-man rubber dinghy, with paddles, falls to the floor. Fortunately we have so far had no need to press this button, for no pilot spanning the Big Pond has yet had an accident over the ocean or had a brush with a German. On the average we cross the ocean in less than 12 hours and luck has been with us. To increase that luck some of the men wear old felt hats which have brought them safety in the past and one Texan never flies the Atlantic without wearing a pair of cowboy boots he treasures. I carry a silver Vatican coin and a bronze medal inscribed to "St. Francis Patron Saint of the Birds." Sometimes, of course, a pilot loses his nerve and quietly disappears-but never until he has returned to Canada and collected his paycheck.

Christmas over the Atlantic

My second transatlantic flight began on Christmas day. I had been celebrating Christmas with the Haydens. Mrs. Hayden had baked a delicious fruitcake and there was dancing. I danced several times with each of the four ladies present and then went straight to my ship. With Bennett again in the van we began to take-off. One plane crashed and burned on the takeoff, though no one was hurt. It was the third of four accidents since November, not a bad record considering all the flying we do. One pilot, badly burned in early December, recovered sufficiently after six weeks in the hospital to make the transatlantic hop later. The most recent and famous victim of a Newfoundland crash was a passenger, Sir Frederick Banting, Nobel Prizewinner and discoverer of insulin.

When we were out six and a half hours everyone lost track of Bennett in a cloud bank. Each pilot flew the rest of the way alone, and as this was the second time a flight group had become separated, we now always make the entire trip solo. After losing sight of Bennett, our plane cruised sometimes at great height and at other times skimmed the tops of the waves at 50 ft.

When we were two hours away from one of the spots toward which we were heading, we received a radio report that the Germans were bombing the neighborhood. Accordingly we changed our destination and soon were taxiing our ship down at a British base. The ground crew had not been told to expect us, but these transatlantic hops have already become so uneventful that when I stepped out of the Lockheed, the ground staff just said hello. Then they rolled the ship away and I sent my wife my customary cable: "100% crossing." Flying the bombers across is done almost as nonchalantly as that.

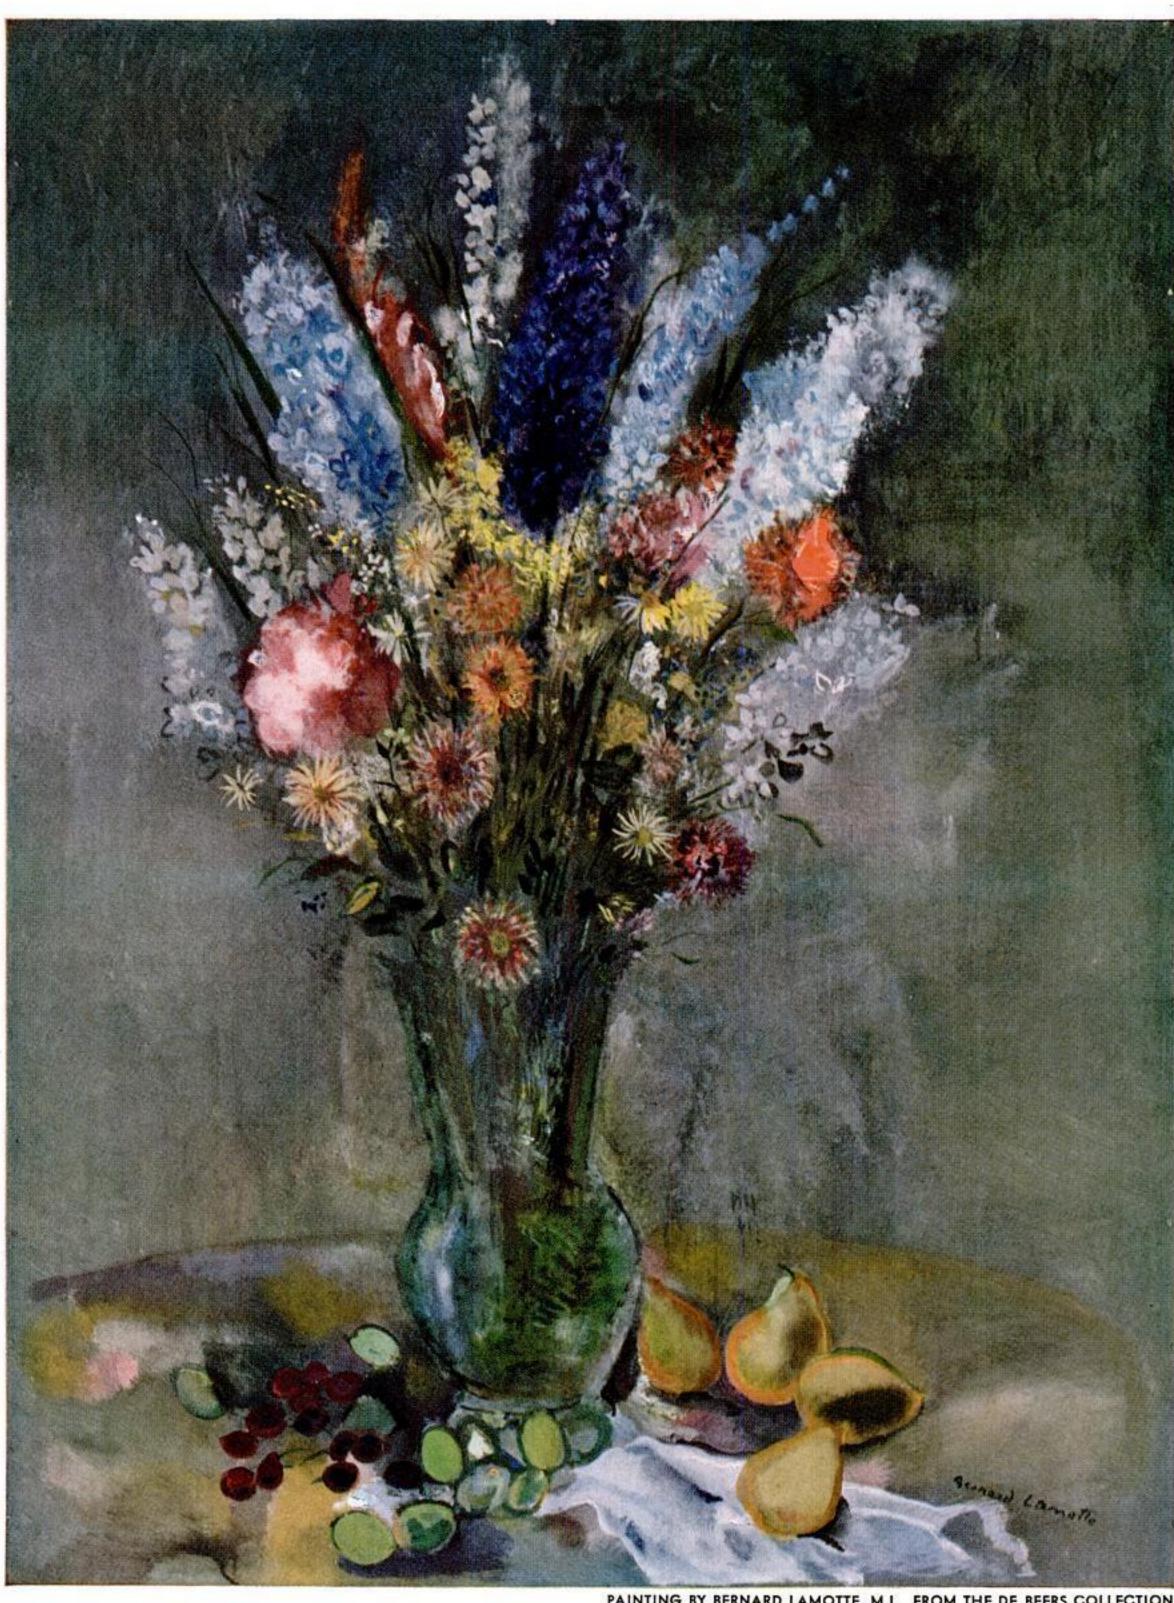

Before each winter flight snow-plow tractors clear drifts from surface of the flying field. The two Lockheed bombers parked nearby already bear the circular R. A. F. emblem.

TO SPEAK AND YET BE SILENT

There is a time in each man's life when flowers cease to be mere casual social gestures towards the season's prettiest debutante, and become fragrant messengers of things unspeakable for very beauty . . . when music holds a tender meaning far too deep for words.

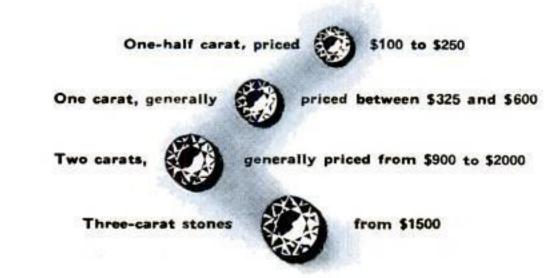

The most precious utterances of men's lives are often spoken thus, with symbols. That is why the thin brown ghosts of blossoms still slip silently from the pages of old diaries ... why a woman listening to music will suddenly grow luminous-eyed as if the melody had echoed from her heart-strings.

But fortunately for men and for the women who love them, all symbols are not so fragile; all beauty not so fleeting. In the deathless fires of his engagement diamond a man may set his truest, most ecstatic message to blaze in changeless glory. The diamond itself should be a fine one and its selection will require the advice of an experienced jeweler. For carat weight is not enough to judge by. Color, absence of imperfections, brilliance of cut must also be considered. The cost will be surprisingly low when one considers the thought his diamond will repeat in undiminished radiance on every day of every year to be. CHILDHOOD DISEASES SLOW ARMY AIR CORPS TRAINING PROGRAM AT CHANUTE FIELD

In mid-March, when airview above was taken of U.S. Army Air Corps' Chanute Field at Rantoul, Ill., 37 of the 218 barracks were quarantined for measles and scarlet fever. Beginning with a measles epidemic, which at its peak put 234 cases in the hospital, the two childhood diseases thoroughly tangled the vital training of 16,000 technicians for Air Corps ground crews.

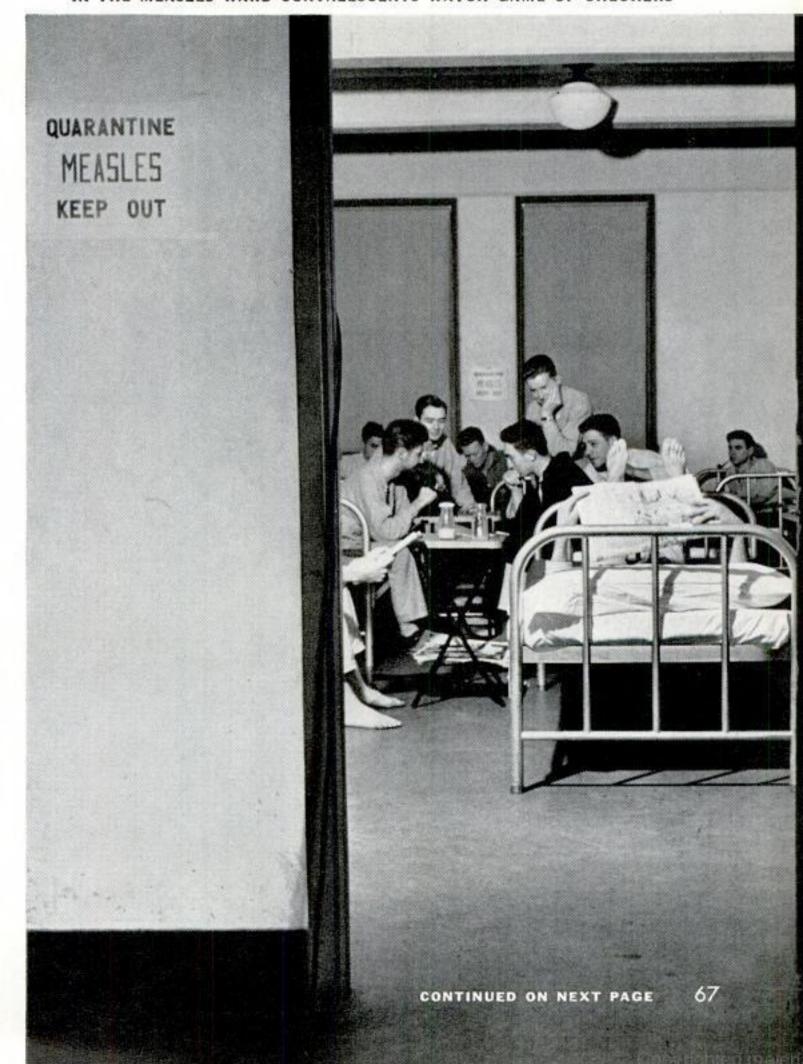

The plight of Chanute Field was representative of a problem that has beset the Army's training program the country over. Such outbreaks inevitably attend the mobilization of thousands of young men, at all stages of susceptibility, into close-packed barrack cities. Despite the double epidemic, the Army Medical Corps at Chanute Field held total sick list to 769.

The Army's epidemic of childhood diseases was apparently induced by the routine civilian cycle which this year found a new accumulation of younger children, who had not been immunized by previous epidemics. For the Army Medical Corps the mild viruses of measles and scarlet fever provided a dress rehearsal for the epidemic of influenza which, according to the once-a-generation theory, is predicted for next winter.

IN THE MEASLES WARD CONVALESCENTS WATCH GAME OF CHECKERS

MOTHS WILL NEVER EAT THIS SUIT

Yesterday Bill Johnson bought this new suit. When it arrived, Mrs. Johnson sprayed it all over with LARVEX. That took only a few minutes and cost less than a single "pressing"—yet gave Bill's suit the positive LARVEX protection against moth damage that has been used for years by leading woolen mills, laundries and dry cleaners.

NO STORING AWAY!

As a result of spraying all their clothes—old and new—once a year with LARVEX, the Johnsons will never find a moth hole. For moths starve to death rather than eat LARVEXED clothes, sofas, rugs and drapes.

LARVEX IS DIFFERENT...

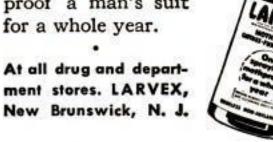

SURE: Not even dry cleaning will impair the positive year-round protection LARVEX gives to woolens.

QUICK: With LARVEX, it takes only a few minutes to mothproof a suit, or a dress and jacket for 12 months.

EASY: The LARVEX bottle sprayer is so simple to use.

CHEAP: Only 79¢ per pint, $1.19

per quart, so it costs less than a single "pressing" to mothproof a man's suit for a whole year.

Scarlet fever ward during epidemic received three to ten new patients daily. Beds are arranged head-to-toe. As patients recover they are moved to convalescent ward.

Lunch is enjoyed by Private Dean Carter, who two days before had a temperature of 104°. Scarlet fever is usually a 10-days-in-bed, 3-weeks-in-quarantine disease.

Quarantined barracks join in morale revival session, led by post chaplain at portable organ, which he carried from barrack to barrack continuously during the epidemic.

Save time, trouble and expense with a Cutler-Hammer Multi-Breaker

Why tolerate the blown fuse nuisance any longer? Why hunt fuses in the dark ... or break off in the midst of preparing a meal to go to the store for the new fuses you forgot to buy? Why stumble down dark cellar stairs and fumble in the old fuse-box wondering what to do? The Cutler-Hammer Multi-Breaker ends this annoyance forever. It is installed in the kitchen or any other convenient place. And when service goes off, all you do is reset a tiny lever that has snapped out of position. Nothing to buy ... nothing to replace! Service is restored in the twinkling of an eye . . . even by a child! The average new home can have this modern and safe protection for less than $5.00 additional. Also easily installed in old homes.

How much will it cost you? What are all the facts? Write today for our free booklet "Goodbye to Fuses." CUTLER-HAMMER, Inc., Pioneer Electrical Manufacturers, 1394 St. Paul Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

ALL CARS ALIKE?

Not the way I hear it!

SHOWED ME ONE THAT'S DIFFERENT HUDS OF THAT'S IN 5 IMPORTANT WAYS

SOMEONE TOLD ME ONE CAR WAS AS SAFE AS ANOTHER ... BUT ...

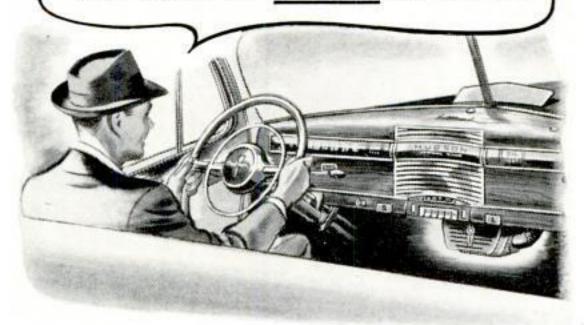

You've got to take a lot of the talk you hear with a grain of salt! Certainly this 1941 Safety Engineering Magazine Award, for safest body design of any 1941 car, proves Hudson has a big edge on the rest. To say nothing of Patented Double-Safe Hydraulic Brakes and Auto-Poise Front Wheel Control . . . nothing like them on any other car! WHO SAID ALL CARS WERE ALIKE IN DRIVING EASE?

When I climbed into a Hudson with Vacumotive Drive*, I found that, if I wanted to, I could just toss the clutch pedal away. Here was something big and really different. You can start, go and back up; your "clutch foot" has nothing to do. And that Hudson Overdrive is a joy forever! *Only $27.50, installed at factory

I'VE HEARD TELL THAT ALL CARS ARE ALIKE IN COMFORT ... BUT ...

The salesman told me Hudson uses the finest and costliest combination of husky coil springs in front and long leaf ones in back, so I said: "Show me." One ride did! Smoothest thing on four wheels! All kinds of room inside, too . . . and I'd never be without that Hudson Weather-Master. Winter or summer . . . no drafts, no fume-laden air, no fogged windows!

SOME FOLKS SAY ALL CARS LOOK PRETTY MUCH ALIKE ... BUT ...

If there has ever been anything quite so completely beautiful as this new color harmony idea of Hudson's (they call it "Symphonic Styling"), I've never seen it. You get your choice of three interior combinations, each harmonizing all the way through with a group of beautiful exterior colors. It's brand new in low priced cars, and costs nothing extra.

MAYBE YOU THINK THERE ISN'T MUCH DIFFERENCE IN ECONOMY ... BUT ...

Here's another 1941 trophy, won by the big, 92-horsepower Hudson Six in the 1941 Gilmore Grand Canyon Economy Run. It beat all but two of the shortest, lowest-powered cars in the entire run in miles per gallon! Think of getting economy like that in cars that hold nearly 150 official performance records!

But When It Comes To PRICE There's Practically No Difference

PRICES START AMONG THE LOWEST

The big, husky, 92-horsepower Hudson Six shown below is one of the lowest priced sedans on today's market. And, in every popular price class...lowest, low and moderate . . . Hudson's 31 years of engineering leadership bring you a Hudson Six or Eight equally far ahead of the rest in value.

Stop at the nearest Hudson showroom and drive a 1941 Hudson . . . find out at the wheel that all cars are not alike . . . that here is one that's different and better in at least 5 important ways. Get more car for your money, and a mighty good deal on your present car!

NEBRASKA LAUNCHES BIG U.S. ART SHOW WITH FINE DISPLAY OF LIVING TABLEAUX

To the people of Lincoln, Neb., an art show is always an occasion for dressing up and fun. So this winter, when the University of Nebraska held its 51st annual exhibit of modern U. S. art, the leading lights of Lincoln followed traditional custom and opened the show with a bang-up display of living tableaux. Four of them are shown here, paired with the paintings that inspired them. They are all modern U.S. pictures which have become favorites with Nebraska art lovers. Backgrounds for the tableaux were painted by Lincoln artists who have raised this fine oldfashioned stunt to a high state of perfection.

On the next pages are a dozen pictures from this year's exhibit. From this show Nebraska will buy four works to add to its permanent collection of modern U. S. art which is the finest owned by any university.

Nebraskans have pioneered to bring good art not only to their capitol but to outlying districts. A unique service of the University is its Rural Travelling Gallery. This is run by Mrs. Nellie Vance (page 75) who loads her car with art reproductions and tours them around to rural schools. Mrs. Vance believes in making art a pleasure, not a chore, and asks only two questions: Which picture do you like best? Where would you hang it?

"T. P. AND JAKE" BY THOMAS BENTON

POSED BY EDWARD ANGLE, AGED 10

"HIGH YALLER" BY REGINALD MARSH

POSED BY MRS. GLEN FOE

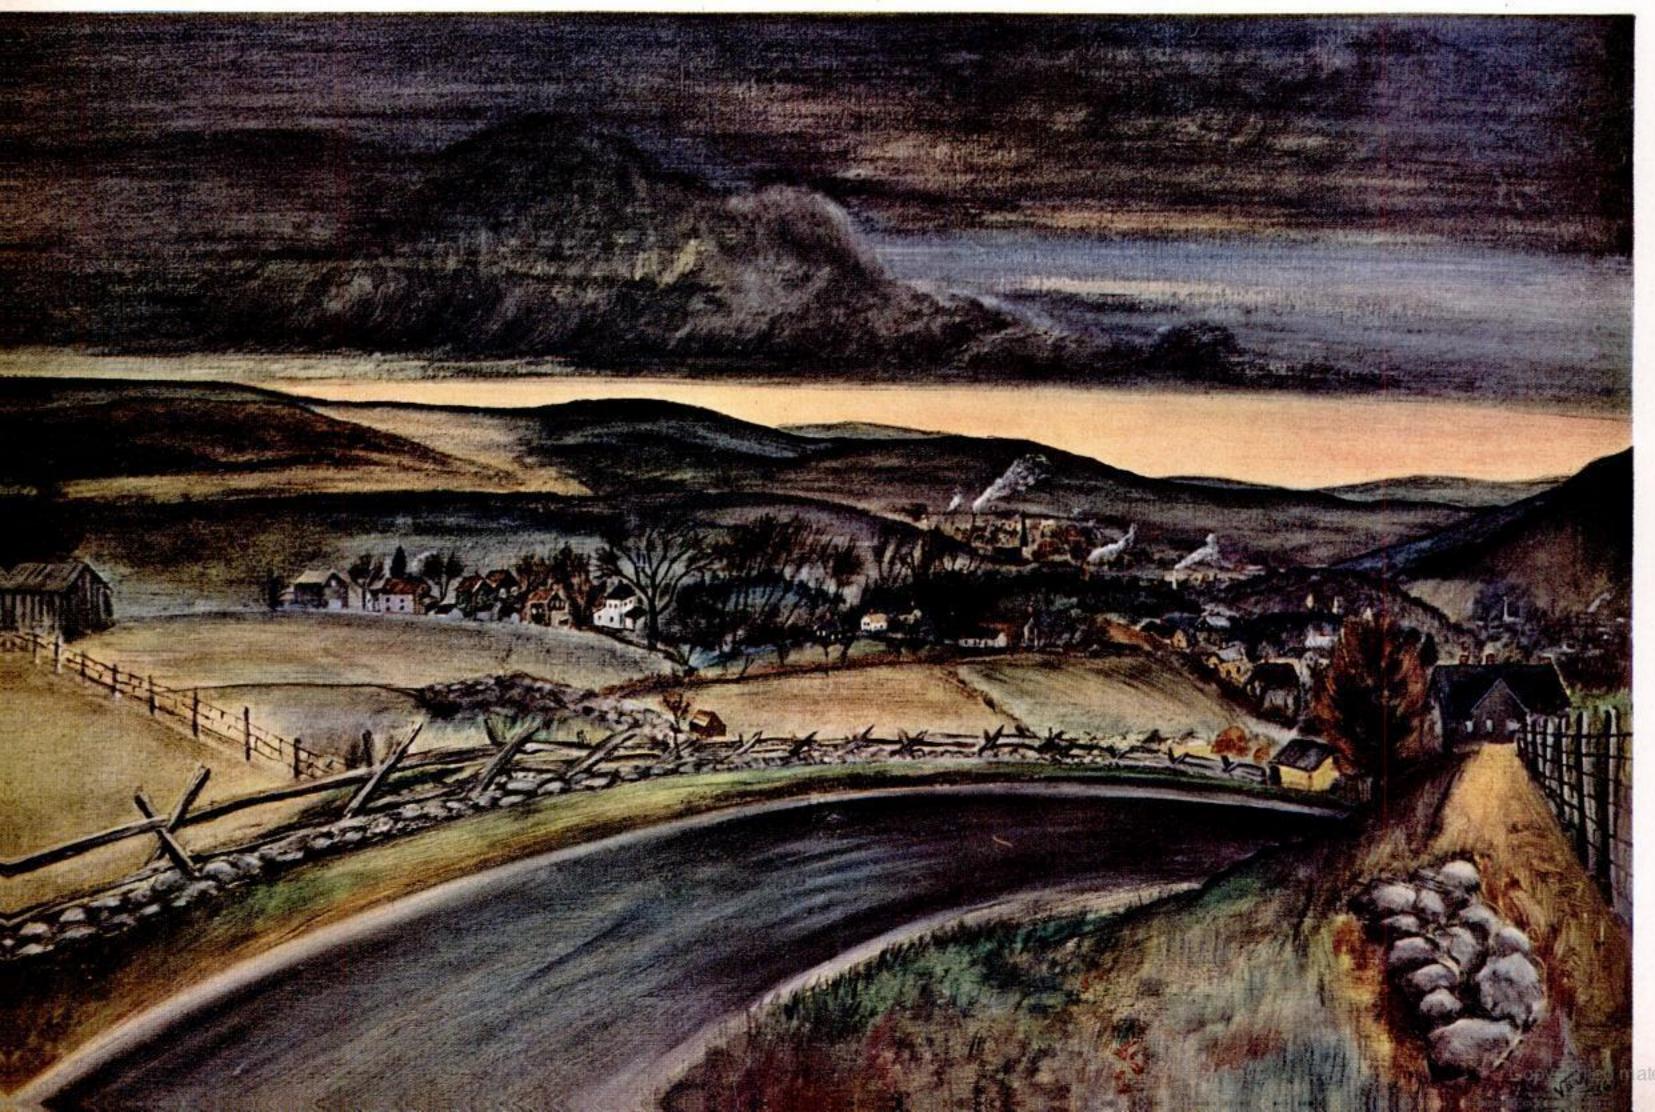

"Guardian Angel" by Lauren Ford captures the magic of a childhood world alive with friendly rabbits, deer, squirrels and singing birds. Miss Ford's characteristic religious touch appears in the radiant figure of an angel guiding a child home by twilight. Painting was bought at the last Carnegie Exhibit by Broker Thomas Lynch of Pittsburgh as a Christmas present for his wife.

"Spring in Bleecker Street" was "caught on the fly," says Painter Andrée Ruellan, one wet April day when she saw a grocery boy eye a passing girl as he pushed his cart full of celery and eggplants. This is typical of how artists find color in commonplace New York streets.

"Road to Danbury" with its rhythm of rolling hills, its play of light and mysterious shadow, was painted by Margit Varga during approaching October storm. Over this road she drives every Saturday from her Connecticut farm to nearby Danbury for her weekend shopping.

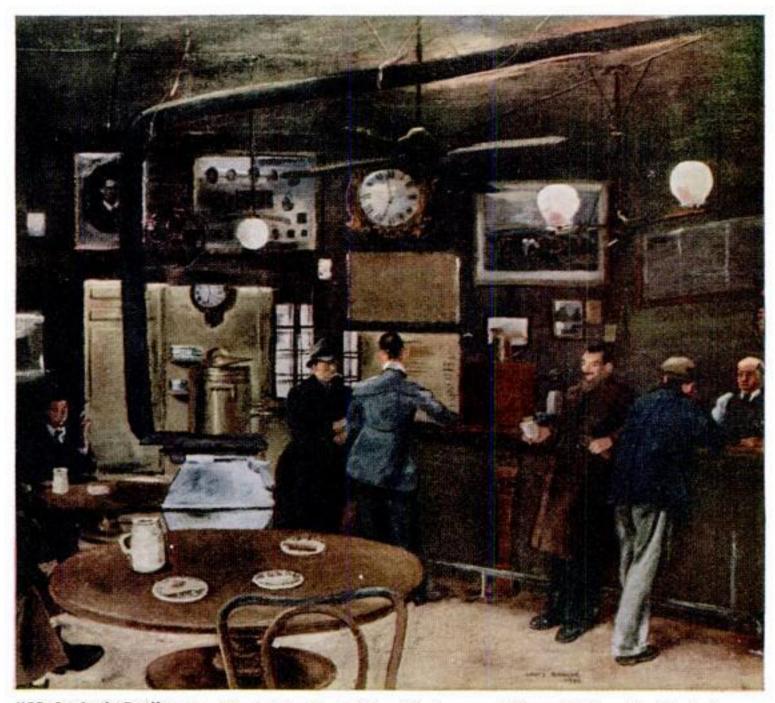

"Works of Man" by Henry Schnakenberg ironically contrasts mighty piers of Thomas Edison Bridge under construction at South Amboy, N. J. with down-and-outers huddled over fire.

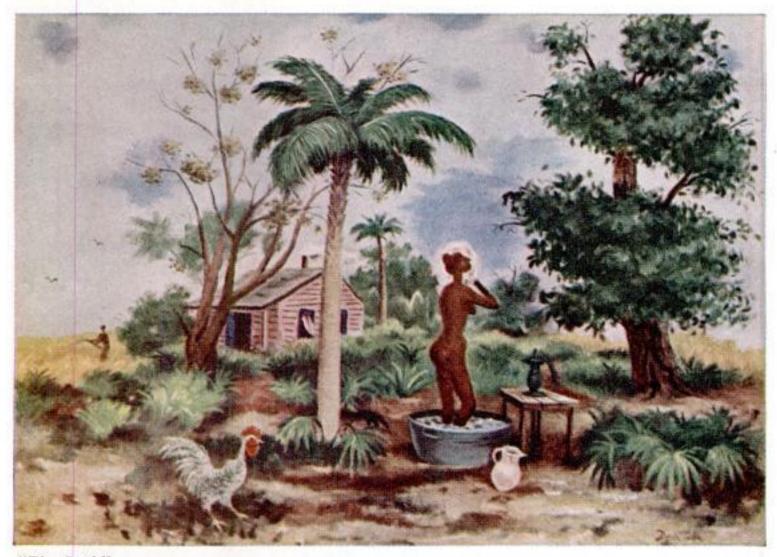

"Boys Sleeping" is by Doris Rosenthal who excels at Mexican subjects. She persuaded an entire schoolroom full of Mexican children to curl up on floor while she sketched this difficult pose.

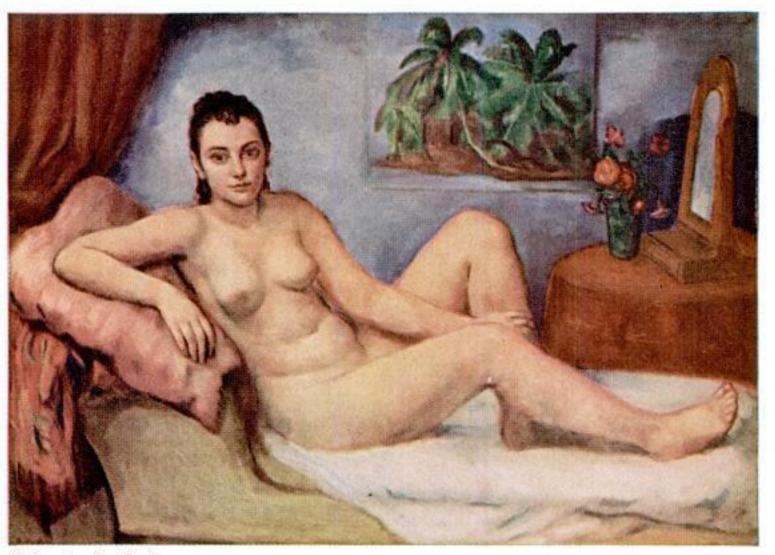

"Beached" evokes adventure although it depicts only an old Cape Cod sloop wrapped in sails and burlap. It won Artist Julian Levi's sympathy because it looked like something on crutches.

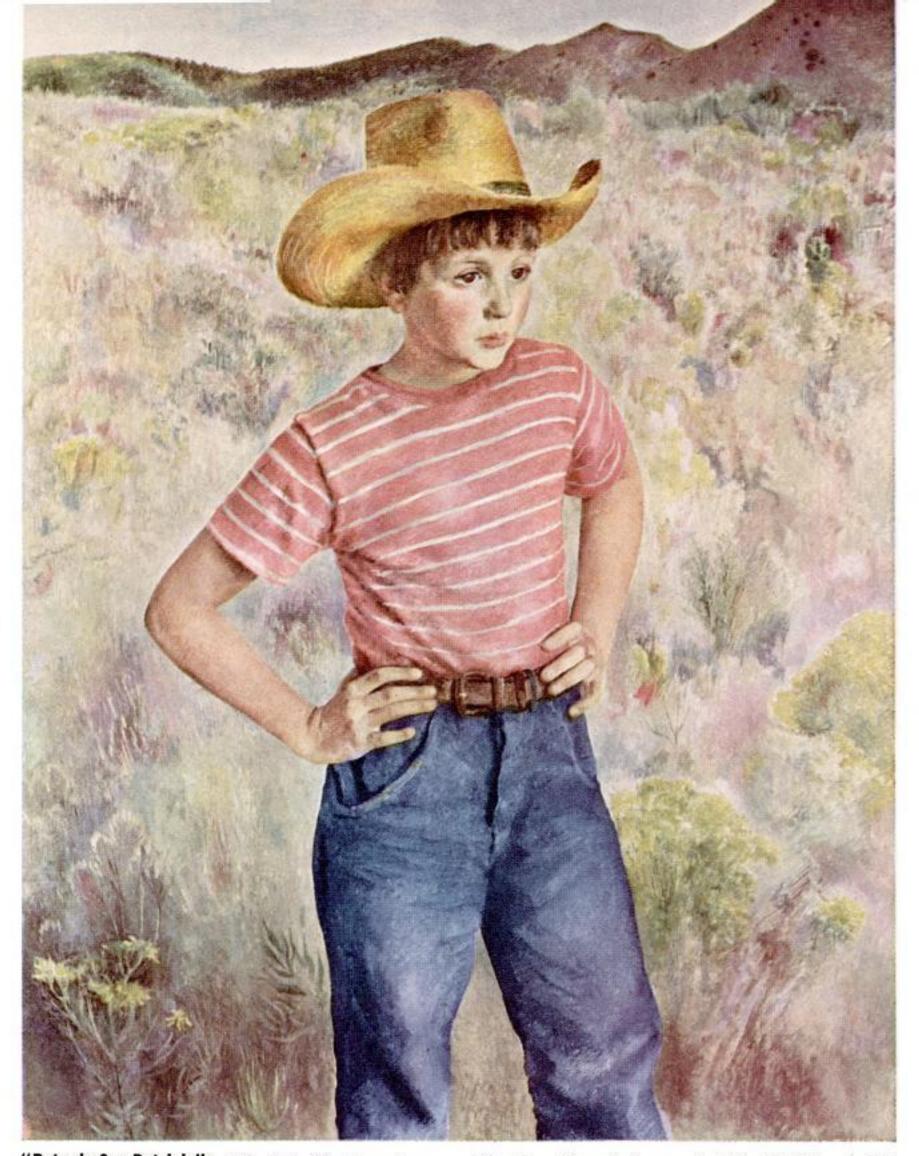

"McSorley's Bar" in New York is by Louis Bouché who says, "I was intrigued by its dark mustiness, simplicity and masculinity of an old-fashioned bar." Bar was also done by John Sloan.

"The Bath" is Doris Lee's droll and delightful study of a sepia Eve enjoying a washtub bath in her own backyard Eden. Artist Lee says she painted it in South Carolina, "almost from life."

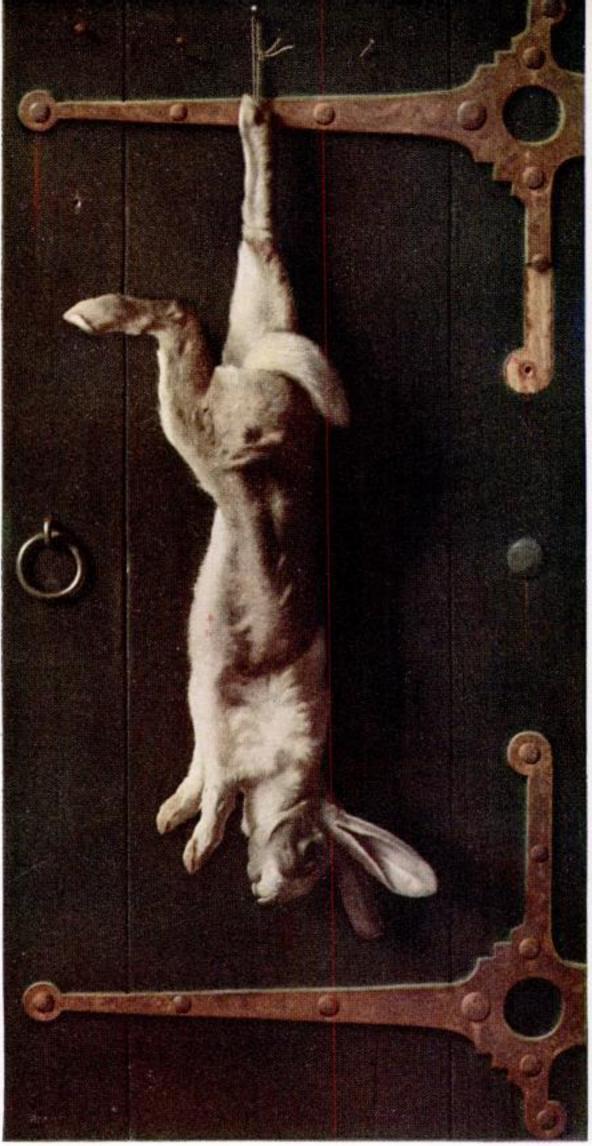

"The Awakening" for its glow and strength is one of Bernard Karfiol's best works. Says he, "It was not painted to illustrate the title—just a fine pose the model unconsciously fell into."

"Peter in San Patricio" by Henriette Wyeth portrays her son near the polo field on their New Mexico ranch.

Peter's mother paints somewhat like his father, Artist Peter Hurd, but with a feminine strength of her own.

"Trophy of the Hunt" is by William Harnett, a 19th Century U. S. artist, whose extraordinarily realistic still lifes are now being newly appreciated.

SPELL OF MOONLIT FIELDS PERVADES THIS FLOWING COMPOSITION, "NIGHT PADDOCKS," PAINTED BY VAUGHN FLANNERY ON HIS MARYLAND FARM WHERE HE RAISES HORSES

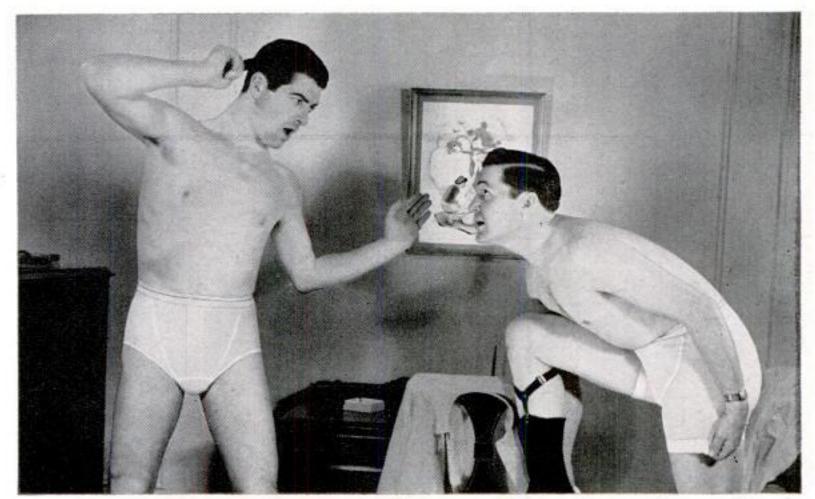

In Lincoln these are some of nearly 6,000 schoolchildren taken on a free visit to Nebraska art show. They are looking at John Curry's John Brown (LIFE, Dec. 25, '39).

Outside Lincoln rural children look at fine art reproductions and originals brought them by smiling Mrs. Vance. She tours 48 such exhibits; schools keep each one week.

HIGHEST PAID SPORTSWRITER, BILL

Bill Cunningham of Boston is the highest paid sportswriter in the world. He is 46 years old. During 19 years his daily column for the Boston Post developed such a tremendous personal following that the Post paid him $21,000 a year. Aware of Cunningham's circulation value, Managing Editor Robert Choate of the older, more conservative, smaller Boston Herald last month electrified Boston's rabid sports fans by hiring him away for a reputed $26,000 a year. To justify this hefty salary without syndication, Cunningham had to attract at least 2,000 new daily readers to the Herald. And when, after four weeks, the Herald's circulation jumped 7,000, Cunningham's great appeal and Choate's judgment were proven.

DEN IS LITTERED WITH A VAST COLLECTION OF JUNK WRITES HIS COLUMN.

CUNNINGHAM GOES TO BOSTON HERALD

Bill Cunningham was born in Texas, played football at Dartmouth, fought with the artillery in the A.E.F. A great working newspaperman, he can turn out prodigious amounts of copy in a short time. It is not unusual for him to file a 3,000 word running account of a championship fight in two hours or write six columns on a Saturday football game in addition to his daily column. He writes as he talks: fast, colorful and with gestures.

Cunningham lives with his wife and two children in West Newton, a Boston suburb. He does his writing in a hideout on Beacon Hill (above), jammed with piles of dusty letters, college mementos, autographed pictures and a grand piano. He had his landlord paint the roof Dartmouth green.

Uncle Harry knew what Easter is for—

NCLE HARRY LIKED EASTER.

"'It's a day when everybody's supposed to be happy,' he'd say. 'I like that.'

"And so Uncle Harry made a sort of business of happiness on Easter. If you were a good friend or a well-loved relative of his, you could expect him to tell you so that day.

"I don't suppose I'd remember all this if it hadn't been for the way he found to express his, Easter message. But I can't forget the lovely flowers that used to appear on our doorstep every Easter week or the thrill and joy they unfailingly gave us.

"Somehow that message of flowers caught the beauty, the heart, and the smile that are in the meaning of Easter. Somehow, I can't help thinking that Uncle Harry knew what Easter is for!"

Of course, Uncle Harry was right. The spirit of happiness is the spirit of Easter. So if you want to do the happy thing for your friends and loved ones this Easter—remember—nothing touches a woman's heart more surely than a gift of flowers! Send a corsage for her to wear in the Easter parade. A potted plant of bright, fresh blooms. Or a glorious arrangement of spring flowers.

When your heart says "remember" —nothing takes the place of flowers!

And it's so easy to send flowers anywhere—in town or hundreds of miles away. Just telephone or go to the nearest flower shop displaying the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association (F.T.D.) emblem. Give the florist your order. He does the rest. He sees that your flowers are promptly delivered—whether the address is just around the corner, on the other side of the country, in Canada, or in a distant land.

And just to make sure they're the freshest, loveliest flowers that ever said "Happy Easter"—put in your order early and go to an authorized F.T.D. member shop.

For F.T.D. florists are the pick of the nation's florists. Florists carefully chosen as F.T.D. members

THIS IS HAPPY HOMECOMING OF SARA FARRELLY (RIGHT) AFTER 20 YEARS ABROAD. HER GERMAN HUSBAND AND CHILDREN ARE AMAZED BY LUXURY OF HER AMERICAN HOME

NEW BROADWAY HIT, "WATCH ON THE RHINE," BRINGS NAZI DANGER CLOSE TO HOME

Grandmotherly love is expressed here by Lucile Watson as she meets for the first time her youngest grandson from Germany.

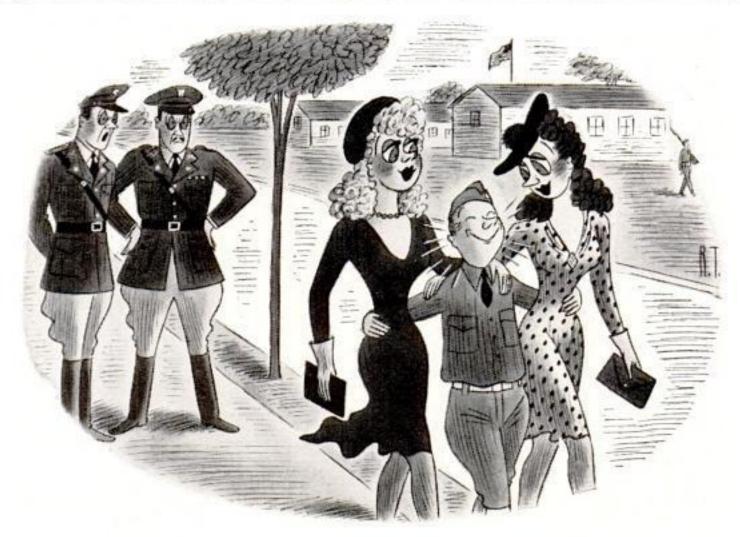

Out of a dozen anti-Nazi plays given on Broadway in recent years, the most eloquent is one in which no Nazi appears. Called Watch on the Rhine, it opened a fortnight ago, and is the third smash hit written by 36-year-old Lillian Hellman. Like her other plays (The Children's Hour, The Little Foxes), No. 3 is directed by fussy, balding Herman Shumlin who hired Miss Hellman as his secretary ten years ago, thus starting a team that has made theater history.

Watch on the Rhine might also be called Watch on the Potomac. Laid on a country estate near Washington, D. C., its story tells of an American girl who comes home to visit her mother after living 20 years abroad. In tow she brings a German husband and their three children (above). As the saucy grandmother, Actress Lucile Watson symbolizes an era of confident, generous America. Into her home she has already taken two royal Rumanian refugees. Her daughter's arrival turns the house into a scene of conflict that shakes but strengthens its foundations.

In her newest work, Playwright Lillian Hellman shows less of her usual sting, her tight craftsmanship. Her first act dawdles, some of her characters are routine. But Watch on the Rhine stacks up as a superior play because often it is fervent and witty, because it states the current crisis in simple, human terms, and because it boasts one character, Kurt Mueller, masterfully acted by Paul Lukas, that is truly heroic.

Pride in American ideals is expressed by Lucile Watson showing portrait of her late husband to daughter and son-in-law.

"When you see a Bendix wash clothes... you can hardly believe your eyes!"

IT FILLS ITSELF WITH WATER! . . . IT CONTROLS WATER TEMPERATURES FOR DIF-FERENT FABRICS!...IT WASHES YOUR CLOTHES!...THEN IT CHANGES THE WATER AND RINSES YOUR CLOTHES THREE TIMES! . . . IT DAMP-DRIES YOUR CLOTHES! . . . IT CLEANS ITSELF! . . . IT DRAINS ITSELF! . . . IT SHUTS ITSELF OFF! ... AND ONCE YOU'VE TURNED THE STARTING DIAL YOU DON'T EVEN TOUCH IT!

Surprises-right from the start! You don't even get your hands wet, with a Bendix! You put in dry clothes -and a load that's half again as big as the average washer could handle! Then . . .

Simple as tuning a radio—you set two controls! Click! -and you get the exact water temperature you want. Click!-and the Bendix starts. Now, add soap-and forget the whole thing! Go do your shopping-go do anything you please! The Bendix will do everything else—all by itself!

All by itself—the Bendix washes! It lifts the clothes and drops them through suds-scrubs them gently together-washes carefully, thoroughly-gets clothes so clean and white they almost startle you! Then! . . .

All by itself—the Bendix rinses! Without so much as a nod from anyone, the Bendix drains away all the dirty water-then tumbles the clothes in three rinses of fresh, clean water! And-imagine it-one of those Bendix rinses equals literally hundreds of the liftings and sousings you do by hand when you use an ordinary washer! Yet the Bendix uses less water than you'd use with the average washer. Then . . .

All by itself—the Bendix damp-dries! And it does the tiresome, dangerous job of wringing-in a better way than the wringer ever could! It spins the clotheswhirls away the water-damp-dries the clothes all ready to hang up! And then . . .

All by itself—the Bendix stops! And whenever you please, you take out the snowiest, fluffiest, cleanest wash the sun ever shone on! But-the Bendix hasn't stopped its work-saving even yet! It has cleaned itselfsprayed itself spic-and-span inside! And you have no machine or set-tubs to clean-no floors to mop!

Trade in your out-of-date washing machine! It may be worth the entire down payment on a new, modern Bendix! You can own a Bendix for as little as 17c a day, on an easy-payment plan. Automatic washing, originated by Bendix, has brought a new kind of washday freedom to tens of thousands of homes all over the country! Americans find kinship in a glass of mellow beer or ale

No one needs to worry about Democracy, as long as the man-in-the-dress-shirt and the man-in-the-flannelshirt can swap opinions over their beer, smile and like each other. That kind of American spirit baffles, and will defeat, any tyrant in the world.

Of all beverages, beer is the most truly democratic. Its delicious flavor wins the man of means. Its modest cost is kind to poorer purses. Its wholesomeness appeals to all! Born of Nature's bounty, beer and ale are rich in the mellow flavor of sun-ripened grain. They are fragrant with the pleasant aroma of fine hops.

These beverages of moderation bring rest and relaxation to weary bodies and tired minds. They promote good cheer and friendship in every walk of life.

Because beer is a beverage of moderation and so great a national favorite, it deserves to have its good name guarded well. We who brew America's beer are cooperating to prevent abuses wherever they may occur in the retailing of beer and ale. You can help with understanding and support of the brewers' "clean-up or close-up" program. It is described in a booklet that is sent free on request. NEWYORK

A BIG SPECTACLE IN BIG PICTURES

Photographs for LIFE by Andreas Feininger

When spring and Easter come, Americans begin to move in on their greatest city. No place in the land equals New York as a tourist attraction. This is curious because the people who come so avidly to New York already know what they are going to see. Most of the city is as familiar to them as the picture at right.

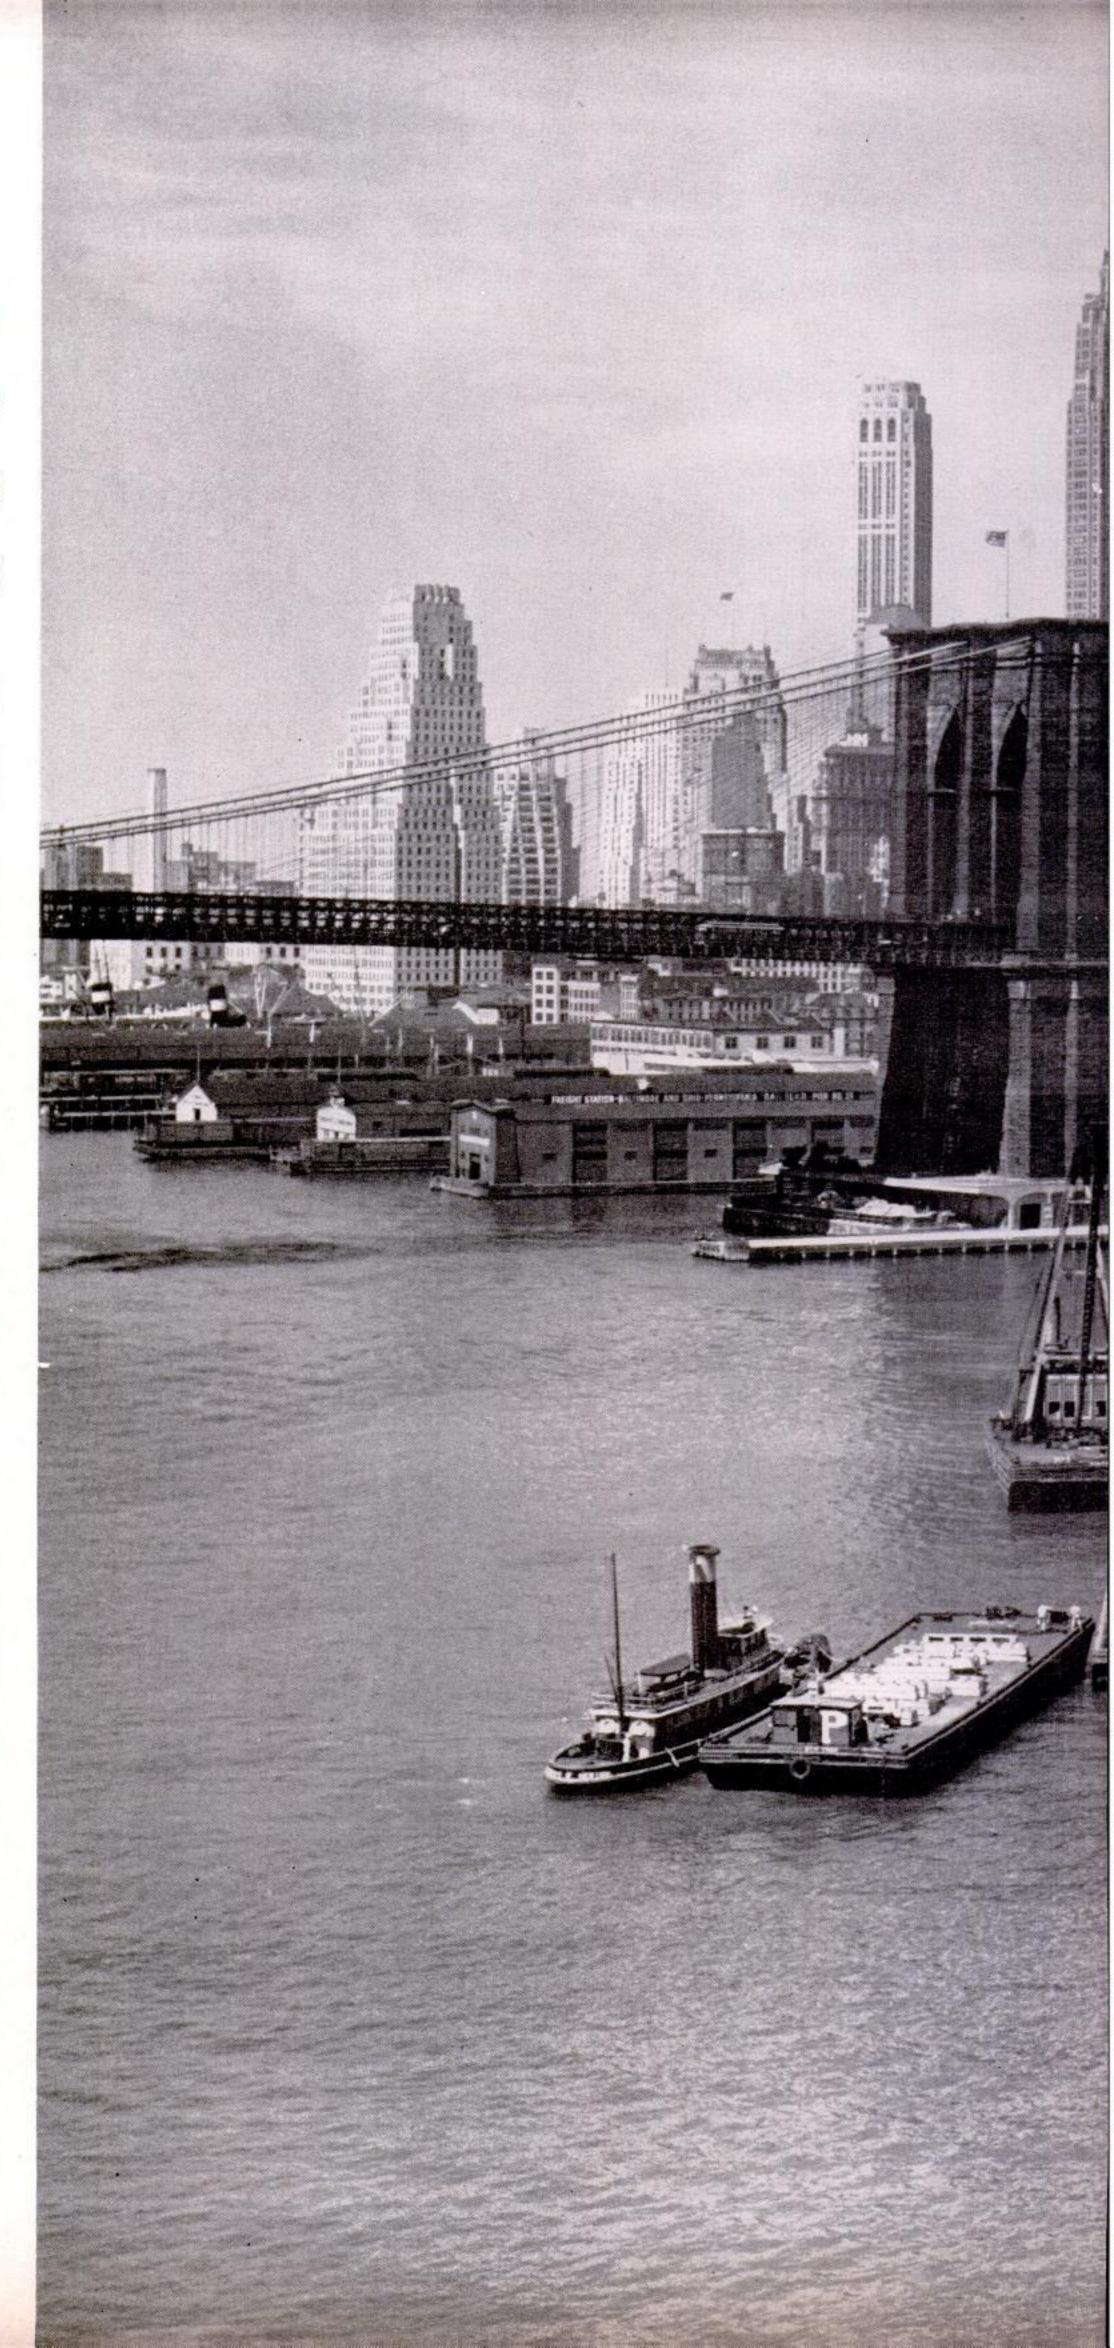

But people are always seeing New York for the first time. Even people who see it day in and day out get the feeling that they are seeing the city for the first time. New York is inexhaustibly new. People rediscover its magnificence in just the way that people find out again and again that Beethoven's music is beautiful, or that Shakespeare's poetry is true, or even that love is wonderful each time, all over again, to each person.

In this portfolio of photographs by Andreas Feininger the people who have seen much of the city will see it once more. The camera here faces the city head on. The approach is clear and honest. This is the way the city is. This is the shape of the city.

It is not the whole city, only the lower third of Manhattan. There are about 300 square miles of upper Manhattan, Brooklyn, the Bronx, Queens and Staten Island which are ignored. These have factories, railroads, warehouses. But someone put them in their place by calling them the "bedrooms of Manhattan." Take away the business towers, the terminals, the docks and the pleasure places of Manhattan, and New York is only a big city, not a magnificent metropolis.

Nor is this a city of people. There are more than 7,000,000 people in New York. They have made the city. But the city itself is much more than they are, the way mountains are more than the people who live on them. The people who have made New York love their vertical, intricate city, whose stone blocks and buildings are spun together with hard straight streets. They love it in early morning when the city has a spacious, solemn dignity; and during the day when it gleams in the sunshine or goes gray in misty rain; and in the quick twilight when the many windows light up while the buildings themselves still show their shapes; and at night when one can hear his own steps on the quiet street and can feel the dark city all around. They love the city because they can make it seem like a person-charming or comforting or heedless or abandoned. They love it when they come to know it, which is not soon nor easy.

They see their city best when they can get off a little way and look at it—across a park, from a roof or a ferry or a bridge. At right, above the half-century-old Brooklyn Bridge, the skyline of the Wall Street district is seen from Manhattan Bridge. Here on the edge of the useful East River, which never had the fancy international traffic of the Hudson River, the lighters cluster around the docks. Across the wide waterfront street are small buildings housing seamen's cheap shops and saloons. Behind are the tenements of the poor lying low beneath the spired castles of America's industry and finance.

PEOPLE WALK ON BROOKLYN BRIDGE

Brooklyn Bridge is not like airy modern bridges which seem to stand tiptoe on light girders. Brooklyn Bridge stands flat-footed on bulky stone piers and is held up by myriad cables. On Sunday mornings the people promenade from Manhattan to Brooklyn between high fish-net walls of stretching steel wires. Six days after the bridge was opened in 1883, thousands of people walked across to enjoy the view and experience. When one woman fell down some steps and screamed, everybody thought that the new bridge was collapsing. In the panic to get off, twelve people were killed.

The elevated railroad tracks are being torn down and replaced with new subways. But fanciful New Yorkers like to think of the day when the city will have the legend of the ghost "El" train which, on murky nights, rumbles plaintively down Ninth Avenue, with the shade of Mayor LaGuardia at the throttle. The Ninth Avenue "El" near 14th Street looked pretty from above, but the street below was dark. When the "Els" came down, New Yorkers suddenly saw more of their city. Discouraged houses lay naked and dirty, but in spots there were forgotten moments of grace and dignity.

THE "EL" TRACKS ARE COMING DOWN

THE FULTON FISH MARKET

The smell that floats over Fulton Fish Market, south of Brooklyn Bridge on the East River, is just as perceptible as the white steam which sails up here. Fulton Fish Market, biggest in the world, is stuck between skyscrapers and river and brooded over by a steam plant with a tall gawky chimney. In the morning the market is a mix-up of fishmen scrambling about on slimy ice, skating on fish scales as they pack, unpack, clean, scrape. Here come cod, bluefish, whitefish, haddock, halibut, perch, pickerel, squirmy squid for Italians, fat carp for Jews, mackerel for poor people, lobster for rich,

In late afternoon, the sun's rays fall almost flat across New Jersey. The light, bursting through the heavy workday smoke and haze, picks out the tidal rivers that meander through the Meadows and turns the Hudson River into a flat sheet of reflection. From the top of the Woolworth Building, looking past its Gothic decoration, you gaze straight west at America. But the beginning of this boundless land is surly Jersey City, lying unhappily between a big river and a big swamp. On the big river itself, quiet just now, moves a coastal passenger boat for Boston, and a few busy ferries.

HUDSON RIVER & NEW JERSEY

BIG ROOM IN PENN STATION

There are two tides in New York: the moon-governed tides which flush ocean waters restlessly back and forth in the harbor; and the sun-governed tides which flush restless people in and out of the city in the morning and at night. A human tide of 100,000 commuters flows daily through Pennsylvania Station. Some terminals are dressed up like cathedrals. The concourse at Penn Station is unashamed of its steel and glass. When the station is empty, a man's step makes an echo. But when it is full, the sounds muffle each other and this big room becomes a shuffling, mumbling place.

The Bowery used to be a pleasant bridle path and now it is a place where bums get a sour laugh out of the fact that the flophouses they sleep in have de luxe hotel names—like Belmont at left above, or Plaza at No. 25 or Gotham at No. 356. On the Bowery pawnbrokers are willing to convert a man's last possession into money, and missionaries are eager to convert a man's soul to God. There is so much noise from the cobbled street, the "El," the trolleys, that sometimes a man can't think. But thoughts of aging men who stand aimlessly around are not pleasant thoughts anyway.

THE DARK LANE OF THE BOWERY

THE BACK OF 52ND STREET

New Yorkers can't see as much of the city as they would like to because there is usually something in the way. When wreckers tore down buildings on 53rd Street west of Fifth Avenue, New Yorkers could look at the backs of the houses whose fronts they knew well. Here is rear of West 52nd Street—the street of elegant restaurants and glittering night clubs—a blunt unbroken building wall, a bare building back, looking like a six-eyed monster with mouth open. Behind are the many-windowed walls of Rockefeller Center which form a wonderful backdrop for midtown Manhattan.

The city reaches high up for light and thus shuts off light from itself. Around every open space it builds a wall of high buildings. This is the pastoral city, the Sheep's Meadow in Central Park where sheep have given way to Sunday sportsmen and their croquet mallets. Looming beyond are towers of wealth and sophistication. One, two, three from left are the Hotels Pierre, Sherry-Netherland, Savoy-Plaza. These are rich and smart, right now the haunts of wealthy refugees and foreign agents. At right is Hotel Plaza which is also rich but would rather be called respectable than smart.

DARRYL ZANUCK: Last of the Wonder boys

HOW TO RUN A ONE-MAN STUDIO by NIVEN BUSCH

ZANUCK IS HOME-TOWN HERO NO. 1 IN WAHOO, NEB.

"And they say nobody ever took a boat through there and came out alive. . . . "

The Canadian girl, picnicking with an out-oftown friend on the grassy bank of the bay below the gorge, pointed at a fissure walled by 1,000ft. cliffs through which the Columbia River tunneled, fast and black. Suddenly the girl turned pale. A big canoe, followed rapidly by two others, had shot out of the canyon, whirled round drunkenly as its momentum lessened, and made for the bank. It was still in deep water when a small man in the bow put down his paddle and jumped overboard, apparently expecting to find footing. For a moment his face was visible above the icy water-an intent, thin face with prominent teeth and forehead; surprised, cold, pale-blue eyes and a full, lightbrown mustache. Weighed down by his backwoods clothing, he sank like a rock. The guide in the steersman's seat reached down and dragged him to the surface, supporting him by the scruff of the neck until the strange flotilla had made shore. The picnicking girls stared in amazement at these voyagers who seemed to have come from another world. Then they drew back in horror. They had just noticed that the third canoe contained a corpse.

The Canadian girls were in a jittery condition. They would probably not have been impressed to learn that the man who had jumped overboard was Darryl Francis Zanuck, a motion-picture producer, returning from a bear hunt on which a member of his party, Director John Adolphi, had died of a stroke. Nevertheless, the picnickers have a certain connection with posterity. They are perhaps the only people who will always remember Darryl Zanuck in the flesh as Hollywood thinks of him in the abstract—a figure so strangely vital as to defy ordinary rules, even the laws of nature, catapulted mysteriously out of a void unreachable by gods or demons.

Zanuck is a Hollywood wonder boy. The type is worth examining because it is becoming rare. Once, of course, there were many wonder boys. Every studio was operated by a wonder boy and every studio was a one-man or one-family show. Modern business conditions and a higher standard of picturemaking made it too hard to be a genius and the wonder boys vanished into legend. Irving Thalberg died, honored by all; B. P. Schulberg was relegated to the background; Carl Laemmle sold his business; Sam Goldwyn, still holding his own, makes only two pictures a year. Only Zanuck, explosively young, lucky, resourceful, ludicrous and energetic, carried on for the benefit of a new generation a tradition which, according to the best statistics, should have been just a memory.

Hollywood cannot recall another wonder boy in Zanuck's class. Rising in a few years from a writer of dog stories to an executive producer responsible for 54 pictures a year, he created the technique of making pictures out of newspaper headlines. For Warner Brothers, he started the gangster cycle (Public Enemy) and the musical cycle (42nd Street). Leaving Warners in 1933, he baptized his own company, Twentieth Century, with The House of Rothschild, which initiated the biographical cycle. It was the biog-

A SPECIAL PREPARATION FOR SHAVING

FOR THE 1 MAN IN 7 WHO SHAVES DAILY

It Needs No Brush Not Greasy or Sticky

Modern life now demands at least 1 man in 7 shave every day. This daily shaving often causes razor scrape—irritation.

To help men solve this problem, we perfected Glider—a rich, soothing cream—not greasy or sticky.

BUFFER BETWEEN BLADE AND SKIN

You first wash your face thoroughly with hot water and soap to remove grit and oily sebum that collects on whiskers every 24 hours. Then spread on Glider quickly and easily with your fingers. Never a brush. Instantly Glider forms a protective layer between the edge of your blade and the sensitive surface of your skin. It enables razor to remove each completely softened whisker at the skin line without scraping or irritating the skin.

7 WHO SHAVES DAILY

For men in responsible positions—doctors, lawyers, businessmen and others who must shave every day—Glider is invaluable. It eliminates the dangers frequent shaving may have for the tender face and leaves your skin smoother, cleaner. Glider has been developed by The J. B. Williams Co., who have been making fine shaving preparations for over 100 years.

positive that Glider will give you more shaving comfort than anything you've ever used that we'll send you a generous tube ABSOLUTELY FREE. No stamps—no cartons—no dimes. raphy not only of a family but of a banking house and Zanuck followed it up, at Twentieth Century-Fox, by making a box-office success out of the biography of an insurance company (Lloyds of London). Behaving as if his desk were a combination of a brigade headquarters and a managing editor's office, he made stories out of the Bible, out of comic supplements and sports pages and out of material so shadowy that a disgruntled writer once appended to a script the harried credit line "Based on a remark by Gregory Ratoff."

Zanuck's answer to all higgling was his box-office returns. When he combined his own company, Twentieth Century, with Fox Film Co., then on the verge of bankruptcy, he turned in a net profit of three and a half million the first year, sixteen million in the next two years. Meanwhile such box-office prodigies as Alexander's Ragtime Band, Jesse James and In Old Chicago established him as motion picture's No. 1 man

So much for the plus side of the Zanuck ledger. Lately there has come to light a startling minus side. As of January 1941, Twentieth Century-Fox finished its most disastrous fiscal year since Zanuck took command. Instead of the grandiose net, the company showed a net loss of more than half a million for the twelve-month period. Other factors besides production were involved in this debacle: Twentieth Century-Fox, second only to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in European distribution, was harder hit than most studios by the loss of the continental market. But even Hitler fails to alibi a painful series of Zanuck flops including such epics as Brigham Young, a Sunday School version of the noted polygamist; The Blue Bird, a Maeterlinckean mare's nest; The Great Profile, an attempt to make a comedy star out of the sagging John Barrymore; and Little Old New York, with Alice Faye.

Such fiascoes did not imperil Zanuck personally. His contract, which as of this month has two straight years to run, was renewed last year without a change. He is and will remain responsible for Twentieth Century-Fox but he may have to share this responsibility with others. Within the last fortnight he has made drastic moves toward decentralization, inducting three new producers-Ernst Lubitsch; William Le Baron, former Paramount head; and Mark Hellinger, a columnist recently trained to celluloid. These men will break all Twentieth Century-Fox precedents by picking and casting their own stories, being responsible to Zanuck only remotely. The Boss himself has announced that he will concentrate this year on only eight pictures out of 24; he will hold the reins loosely on eight more, leave eight to be handled largely by the new blood. A brilliant year may mean restoration of the old order; a bad year will bring about further decentralization. With the one-man studio system facing its critical test, Hollywood will, in the coming months, examine with more than usual attention the background and methods of the gentleman who may well be its last wonder boy.

Start of his career as a joker's stooge

It was about 1922 that a slender youth with buck teeth, a hopechest mustache and a Nebraska accent first appeared on the cinema horizon. Although his name meant nothing to anybody, he was for some reason always introduced in full triplicate—Darryl Francis Zanuck. In those days, as now, it was the custom for unknown young men seeking studio contracts to enter the entourage of some fairly successful person. This person in Zanuck's case was one William Russell, an actor. Russell, a convivial soul, liked to have plenty of people around him and secured this result by keeping on hand large platters of steaming food in which his followers could poke their snouts—a privilege of which Darryl Francis Zanuck availed himself liberally. Russell was also one of the town's top practical jokers and collected for his food by teasing those who ate it. Somehow Zanuck was apt to be the individual who got the hotfoot or had his clothes stolen in the Turkish bath or opened the door that had a bucket balanced on it. He became known in his set as a man who could take it.

The youthful Darryl Francis Zanuck was a very busy man. No matter where he happened to be sleeping, he was always up at 8 a. m. picking at a typewriter. It was his ambition to write stories for the cinema-a career for which his qualifications seemed meager. He had been in the eighth grade of a Wahoo, Neb. primary school when a love of firearms and an itch to travel prompted him to enlist in the 6th Nebraska Infantry. He was 14 at the time and looked 121/2, but the 6th Nebraska Infantry had been detailed for service on the Mexican border and the recruiting sergeant needed men.

Life was fine along the Rio Grande. Zanuck had numerous thrilling ventures. He tells to this day about the time he lay in the mesquite while four Mexicans, or greasers as they were called, took pot shots at him. From Mexico he went direct to France where he served with the 163rd Division of the A. E. F. In the A. E. F., Zanuck learned to box. He fought 26 camp shows as a bantam. Because his small size made him an insignificant target, he was detailed from headquarters for service as a runner. In this capacity he saw frontline service for nearly a year and was under fire much of that time. During the Lys-Scheldt drive, he crossed the Scheldt River seven times in one afternoon under heavy shelling. He was mustered out in 1920, still a private but no longer a bantam. Army food had swollen his frame to lightweight proportions. Also from the Army, oddly enough, he derived his literary ambitions. Some letters to his grandfather concerning life in the A. E. F. had been printed in the Nebraska papers and reprinted in The Stars and Stripes.

Flowering of the Zanuck literary style

Back in Nebraska with nothing else to do, the former private, now a veteran of two wars, began to scribble at a furious rate. Hearing that the late O. Henry had written a story every week, Zanuck put himself on a schedule of two stories a week. After a year of this grind, he sold one of his products-Mad Desire-to Physical Culture magazine. Though not a masterpiece of style, this story had some interesting passages:

A hateful sneer parted Loma's lips; her breasts rose and fell. She stepped back, acidly eyeing me.

"As if I'd give him up," she snarled, a row of ratlike teeth catching a reflection of candlelight. "After we've gone this far together-after he talked me into the loony idea in the first place. What do you take me for, bo? I know I'm about as rank as women get-maybe a notch or so worse than his wife-but I'm no recruit. I've sinned and I'm paying for it. And if my daddy is gonna profit, I want my share, too. Understand? If he goes back, I go with him-arm in arm-or else we both stay. Get me? We both stay." She faced Mall. "Don't we, daddy?"

"We do," he calmly replied.

Part of the Zanuck legend is that during his lean days in Hollywood, he went through a period of starvation but the facts refute this. He never missed a meal. Besides the nourishment available at houses such as Charles Chaplin's where he made himself accepted, he could in case of need have received help from his family. The Zanucks were far from poor. In Nebraska they had been prosperous farm people, plain, ordinary Aryans of English and Swiss descent. About this time they moved to California, making some real-estate investments. Though Zanuck sometimes dropped in for a snack in his mother's bungalow court, he disdained financial aid. He wasn't having much luck selling stories but he got a job catching rivets in a San Pedro shipyard. Fired for dropping a rivet, he sold hair tonic from door to door. The hair tonic was known as Yuccatone and though he never sold much of it, Zanuck persuaded its manufacturer, one A. F. Foster, to pay for the printing of a book he'd written: Habit and Other Short Stories, copyright 1923 by Times Mirror Press of Los Angeles. This volume consisted of one short story, two rejected scenarios and a 100-page testimonial for Yuccatone. Its style shows a not very startling improvement over Mad Desire.

The author of Habit was soon well rewarded. He sold the rights to the short story, the rejected scenarios and the Yuccatone blurb. Motion pictures were made of all four and Warner Brothers hired Zanuck as a writer. At that time Warners had two stars, Al Jolson, the singer, and Rin Tin Tin, the dog. Zanuck wrote for Rin Tin. It soon became clear that he was no ordinary writer of dog stories. He established himself as the greatest dog-script writer in history. In his spare time he learned in rapid succession how to cut, direct and produce pictures, and made so many suggestions about things which were none of his business that Warner Brothers, to keep him from annoying people, promoted him fast. Meanwhile, Vitaphone Sound Recording, of which the Warners held the patent, was causing the company to skyrocket from the status of a shaky independent to a bulwark of the industry. Zanuck was skyrocketing, too. At 30, he found himself, much to his own surprise, executive in charge of production for the vast, newly merged firm of Warner-First National.

Zanuck's relations with the Warners have been dramatic. With the Warners he had risen in a few years from obscurity to power and wealth. His personal life had been as closely associated with the family as if he had been related to them by blood. One day he severed both personal and business relations on 24 hours' notice, tearing up a $5,000-a-week contract. He did this because the Warners extended a 50% pay cut, put into force during the banking emergency of 1933, for two weeks after the date Zanuck had promised the employes that the old salaries would be restored. The parting was not friendly. For over a year Zanuck and the Warners had no communication. At the end of this time Mrs. Benjamin Warner, mother of the brothers, died. The family was having the L-waya. Only a few close friends had been invited among whom, needless to say, Zanuck was not included. The rabbi was intoning the El Molay Rachamim when Zanuck entered the drawing room where the bier lay, banked with candles. For three hours he joined in the service. At its conclusion he rose and hurried out without speaking to anybody but his action had repaired the broken friendship. Since the day of the L-waya, Zanuck and the Warners have been close friends.

His technique of working with ideas

Outwardly, there is little difference between the system of operations he set up at Warners in 1930 and his system today. The difference is psychological. In those days he was not yet sure of himself. He valued the opportunities for education available to him through hiring men with shrewd, creative brains. He was still learning, voraciously, at break-neck speed, and yet in a sense humbly. There was a peculiar listening quality about him as he sat slumped down behind his big desk at the late conferences, guiding the discussion but often neglecting to dominate it, turning his intent, restless eyes on one man after another as if trying, as each spoke, to seize what was valuable in the speaker's personality and absorb it into his own. People who knew him in this period but missed the intervening three or four years were amazed, on going back to work for him, at the change in his technique.

Zanuck has always liked to work at night. By day a motion-picture studio has a brisk, cheerful atmosphere but after 5 o'clock its mood is different. Then it seems to nestle like an army post behind its walls and fences under the big California stars. The little artificial streets between the sets and office buildings are deserted. In their sentry boxes by the gates the studio policemen sit, paper containers of coffee beside them, reading the form sheets or watching the cars passing on the boulevard.

Outside Zanuck's office at Twentieth Century-Fox a small light gives notice that the Boss is on the lot. On week nights the light burns from whenever it gets dark to 2 or 3 in the morning. Sometimes it is still burning at 4 or 5.

Inside, the scene is always the same. A group of men sit around in big leather chairs while Zanuck, in his shirt sleeves, swinging a sawed-off polo mallet marches up and down the room with a quick, jerky step. He pantomimes, shouts, curses, dances. He bends over some hapless listener, threatening, cajoling or making love. His purpose is to convey ideas which he has thought up in connection with whatever story property is under discussion. Beside his desk sits the conference secretary, Dorothy Hechtlinger, putting down everything he says: next morning at 9 everyone concerned will receive a neatly typewritten booklet incorporating Mr. Zanuck's monolog of the night before and modestly entitled, "Conference Notes." Miss Hechtlinger has a shrewd talent for extracting the kernel of her employer's thought.

Zanuck's actual comments may be as follows: "So this skunk comes in and so on, so forth—'Where's the dame?' " (Pantomime: head jerked rapidly, left to right, eyes rolling.) "... He looks around. My God!... It's terrific...." (Pantomime: eyes dilated, mouth open.) "... There's the gun or whatever it is on the floor still smoking.... Judas!... What's he gonna do? And then he sees her...."

Miss Hechtlinger's conference notes will read: "Ramon enters, examining the premises for some trace of Dolores. He is surprised at seeing the lethal weapon on the floor. (Note: Mr. Zanuck feels this does not have to be a gun.) The presence of Dolores herself, so incriminating at this time, makes him realize the seriousness of the situation."

"Don't say yes until I finish talking"

Zanuck holds as many as two story conferences a day. Sometimes a single conference will be four hours long. When he isn't holding a conference he cuts a picture or listens to a production number for a musical or discusses casting problems, budget problems or costume problems with the men in charge of these departments. On pictures that really interest him, he personally supervises everything from the choice of a director to a dress extra's headdress. He doesn't ban helpful suggestions but looks sharply at the manner in which his colleagues offer their agreement; he doesn't like to be agreed with too easily. Once he shouted at a conference of steam-room pundits, "For God's sake, don't say yes until I finish talking."

Zanuck has accepted good-naturedly some fairly drastic correction. One day in Caliente he was refreshing himself after producing Noah's Ark, an Old Testament hodgepodge which was doing badly at the box office, when suddenly a stiff kick bounced him up against the bar. Zanuck came out of his shock in a fighting pose.

"What was that for?" he demanded, glaring at the kicker, a writer named Arthur Caesar.

"That," said Caesar, "is for taking a book that's been a smash for 5,000 years and making a flop out of it."

Instead of striking his antagonist, Zanuck gave Caesar a contract on the spot. He admires aggressive people, dislikes diplomatic and submissive types. Apparently he never realizes that a few months' association with him combined with a relish for large weekly checks is apt to produce submissiveness in anybody. He doesn't like women around him except in social or secretarial capacities. One of the few he seemed able to tolerate was Scenarist Kathryn Scola who was in the habit, from time to time, of launching a gadfly-like attack on him. Once Zanuck, discussing a female character, declaimed, "So she has a change of heart. Her love turns into hate."

"Why, Mr. Zanuck?" snapped Miss $cola.

Zanuck stared at her, bewildered.

"I said 'Why?' " repeated Miss Scola firmly, "Why does her love turn into hate?"

Zanuck ran into his study; he walked up and down for some time, chewing his cigar. When he came back he seemed confident again. "All right," he said urbanely, "So her love doesn't turn to hate."

He picked up the discussion where he had dropped it.

Irving Berlin once flabbergasted him in similar fashion. Zanuck had launched a fierce attack on the original story for Alexander's Ragtime Band which Berlin had written with Richard Sherman. The emotional Berlin was very much upset.

"Please, Darryl," he begged, "Ad lib something."

Zanuck gulped. To be asked to do just what he always does without realizing it set him back on his heels. He dismissed the conference. Later he spent two days by himself working on a new outline for this picture, which eventually made more money than anything else he has produced.

At his best his conference ideas are brilliant, rapid and powerful; he is capable of contributing characterizations and structural changes which add immensely to a picture's success.

As has been suggested, Zanuck was never a good writer himself. He was and still is, a great idea man. In the early days at Warners, he and Bess Meredyth were the entire scenario staff. Zanuck's name appeared on so many pictures that exhibitors wrote irritated letters to the sales department, demanding that the company hire more writers. Zanuck met this difficulty by inventing three new names: Melville Crossman, Mark Canfield and Gregory Rogers. He registered these names with the U.S. patent office. Melville Crossman's stories were particularly successful and a year later M-G-M sent an agent to contact this writer and, if possible, lure him away from Warners. By this time Zanuck was Warner Brothers production head but he personally accepted the calls which came in for Crossman and for three weeks had a wonderful time bewildering the agent. He no longer uses his various nom de plumes but still originates many of the stories which Twentieth Century-Fox produces. He dictates two or three pages and sends them around to writers and producers with no name attached. The Boss's connection with such stories is a carefully guarded secret but experienced Zanuck men have learned to identify these products by certain turns of phrase and a screwball Balzacian style of characterization. Nearly every musical the company has ever made began with an idea by Zanuck, including the forthcoming Great American Broadcast.

What Zanuck thinks that the public thinks

When tired or distracted he is likely to botch up a good story with the broadest type of theatrical hokum. Sometimes such mistakes are traceable to a mistaken appraisal of audience intelligence. Zanuck has retained stupid people on his staff because he felt their obtusity would keep him from going highbrow.

"I'll tell you why I keep him," he explained of a director whose intelligence was being attacked. "The guy has something. I know that if a situation is clear to him, it's clear to anybody.'

His estimate of the public's wits is set at no idealistic peak. During the making of a picture about Cardinal Richelieu, he asked Cameron Rogers' opinion of a situation; Rogers replied that while the idea was alright structurally it was untrue to history. Zanuck countered judiciously, "I don't think we need to worry so much about that." After a pause he added a remark which perhaps sums up his attitude toward cinema's 80,000,000 customers. "Anyway," he said, "Most people think Richelieu was Rasputin."

Zanuck himself keeps Rasputin and the Red Cardinal quite separate. As a result of research he has done in making biographical and costume pictures, he knows more history than most professors. In other directions, however, his culture has of necessity been taken on the run. On his last trip to Paris he entered the Louvre at a dogtrot, advising his staff, "We gotta be out this joint in 20 minutes." Later the same day he proved the utility of his fast clip by running and cutting two pictures while waiting in the Fox office in the Champs-Elysées for the parade in honor of the King and Queen of England.

His film characters all bear the impress of his urge for speed and lusty feel for living. He puts his brand on them in much the same manner that he put his initials in neon tubing on his former Beverly Hills home, giving the place the air of a Greek letter fraternity. Inevitably he has more success with male than with female characters in celluloid. The same truth applies to his dealings with actors and actresses. His promotion of Sonja Henie, a brilliant tour de force of showmanship, and Alice Faye, whom he raised to national eminence from a job as a band singer, have been his only real triumphs with women. On the other hand he has made box-office sensations out of a long list of male actors, notably Tyrone Power, James Cagney, William Powell, Henry Fonda, Edward G. Robinson and even the ever-loving Don Ameche.

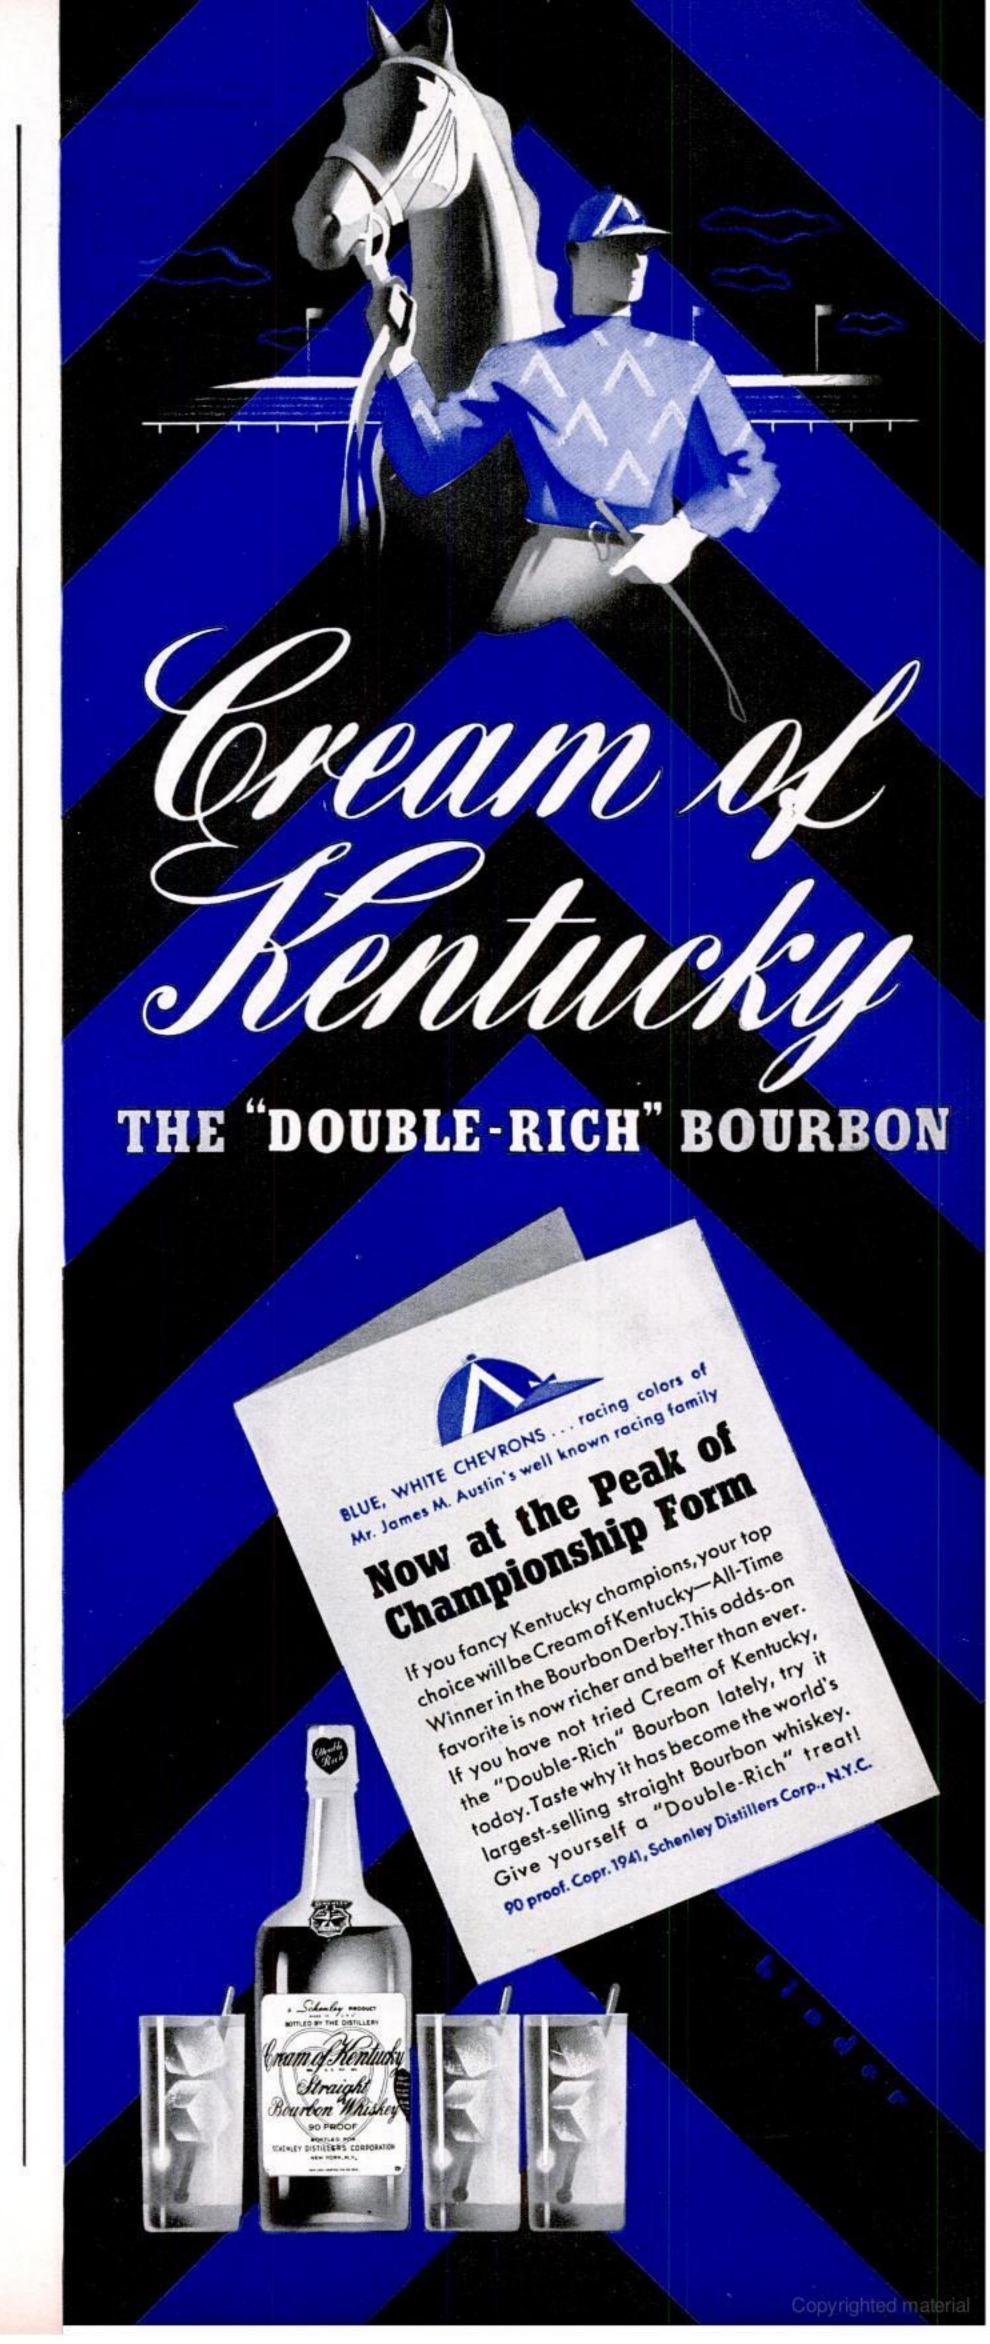

The decline and fall of Shirley Temple

Shirley Temple's decline in popularity has sometimes been written up as another Zanuck failure. Possibly this is true. When he took over Fox, Shirley occupied the same position there that Rin Tin Tin occupied when he went to Warners: she was keeping the company out of bankruptcy. The following year, due largely to loan-out pictures and pictures made before Zanuck's entry, she became the Nation's No. 1 box-office star. Her prestige lured Zanuck into a trap. She had been a gold mine in relatively cheap pictures: wasn't it reasonable to suppose she would gross twice as much in expensive pictures? It was reasonable-but it wasn't so. The public was already getting tired of dimples and Shirley was abetting its indifference by growing up. Last year when her contract expired, Zanuck offered her a new deal, but not at $150,000 a picture, which was what he had been paying her. Shirley's mother, after weighing the evidence, decided it was time her daughter started taking school more seriously.

Back of every successful man are certain essential people who operate in anonymity behind the scenes. In Zanuck's life there are three such people: his partner, Joseph M. Schenck; his press agent, Harry Brand; and his wife, Virginia. Schenck put him in business after Zanuck left Warners, financing the company which later became Twentieth Century-Fox. Their original contract was drawn on a single sheet of note paper, without legal advice. Their personal relations have continued warm although Schenck, as testimony revealed when the U. S. brought him to trial last month on tax-evasion charges, functions largely as a handshaker, bouquet-sender and goodwill passer-outer for the company. Harry Brand's functions are quite different. It is his job to exploit the Zanuck legend and the Zanuck product and, more imperturbably, to advise the Boss on all problems relating to Zanuck's personal contact with the public.

Virginia Zanuck's most arduous service for her husband, aside from bringing up three children, is to do duty as a guinea pig; he waits anxiously for her verdict at projection-room showings of his efforts. 'She has the attitude of a typical movie fan from Omaha,' he explains. Mrs. Zanuck is a quiet woman with a gentle, pretty face which seems to reflect no regret at an action for which she was once severely taken to task-"throwing away her career" on a struggling film writer. At the time of their marriage, Mrs. Zanuck was playing leads with Comedian Buster Keaton.

He's in the Army now

Three months ago ex-Private D. F. Zanuck was commissioned as a Lieutenant Colonel of Signal Corps Reserve. His chief duty in his military capacity will be to produce 60 educational shorts designed to teach draftees how to be soldiers. In spite of this added chore the new decentralized setup will allow him to take life easier, spend more time riding, boxing, skiing and swimming in the small base ment pool at the studio in which, in order to ensure a tonic effect lumps of ice are kept floating.

Of late he has been playing less polo, a game he took up eigh years ago. As soon as Zanuck was sure he really liked the game, he set himself to qualify for the best polo there was. He soon achieved a two-goal rating, which is very good for a small man. In 1937 scampering after Aidan Roark's long forehand shots with Ceci Smith at No. 3 and Tyrrell-Martin at back, his team won the Hur lingham Open-the world's most coveted polo honor next to the Meadow Brook Cup. He still keeps a string of horses on his big ranch in the San Fernando Valley; several times a week he takes a studio cavalcade out riding. It never seems to occur to him that few of his companions are equipped to duplicate his feats of horseman ship. Last year "Zanuck's Cavalry," as the troop is known at the studio, was impaired by the breakage of two arms and a leg. Few employes, however, turn down an opportunity to ride with the Boss

After riding, a lull takes place in the Zanuck schedule. It is generally about 6 p. m. when he gets back to work. He has a steam and a rub from Sam, the big ex-wrestler who also does duty as his personal barber and has in consequence been awarded the officia title of "Vice President in Charge of Shaving." When Zanuck is ir a festive mood he amuses himself by taking a full, right-hand swing at Sam. When this happens it is understood that Sam must cringe as if in dire pain, clutch at the injured segment of his anatomy, and moan, "Aw, gee, Boss! Cut it out." Privately, he explains, "He don't hurt me, but he wants me to let on like he did. He just like to have some laughs-no harm in it."

In his earlier days Zanuck's desire for laughs was incorporated in a fiendish succession of practical jokes—in part, no doubt, a com pensation for what he went through in the Russell period. He dis pensed thousands of rubber bonbons and had a penchant for fixing telephones so they could not be answered and then detailing secretary to spend an afternoon calling the station thus fixed. The occasion which provided his first meeting with the late Dougla Fairbanks Sr., was the charging of a chair with electricity to hot

How to see twice as much of America on your train trip to California!

How much have you seen of your own America? Have you thrilled L to mountains that are more than two miles high ... a flaming sunset on the Arizona desert ... San Francisco's mighty bridges ... the virgin forests of Oregon and Washington? Do you know how blue the Pacific Ocean really is? Have you ever seen an Indian?

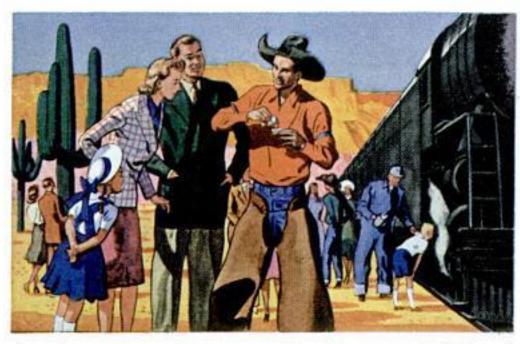

Southern Pacific, the West's greatest railroad, offers you an easy way to know your country better. When you go to California this year, go on one of our Four Scenic Routes (see map) and return on another S. P. route. Thus you see an entirely different part of the United States each way. You see twice as much of America as you would by going and returning on the same route . . . for not 1¢ extra rail fare (from most eastern and mid-western places). For example:

You can go on Southern Pacific's Golden State Route, through the Mexican Border country along the Rio Grande. Stopover at El Paso for the thrilling one-day tour to Carlsbad Caverns National Park ($9.75 all-expense).

Cowboys meet the train in New Mexico and Arizona! Your Golden State Route train will be the famous Golden State Limited (extra fine service for no extra fare) or the money-saving Californian (good meals for $1.25 a day).

Next stop, Los Angeles! Miles of palm-fringed beaches, Hollywood, movie stars. Then you speed up the California coast to San Francisco on Southern Pacific's thrilling streamlined Daylight, most beautiful train in the world.

See San Francisco, then speed north on Southern Pacific's Shasta Route to the evergreen Pacific Northwest. Low cost side trips show you the giant trees of the Redwood Empire or magnificent Crater Lake National Park.

Your Shasta Route train will be the luxurious, all-Pullman Cascade or the money-saving Beaver (breakfast 35¢, luncheon 40¢, dinner 50¢). From the Pacific Northwest, you can return to your hometown on any northern railroad line you choose.

Note: If you live on the Pacific Coast, you can enjoy a "go one way, return another" trip East. See your nearest S. P. agent.

How many "$5,000 cars" can you name today?

Not so MANY YEARS AGO, every community had its families who paid four, five, or six thousand dollars for their motor cars.

Some of the makers of those cars are still in business today, and making finer cars now than they have ever made. But their highestpriced cars today sell far below those prices of a few years ago.

The cost of quality in motor cars has come down a long way. We take occasion to point to that fact because we at Ford have probably done more than anybody else to bring it down.

We have done it by refusing to believe that a low-priced motor car has to be inferior to a high-priced one in the quality of its design, construction, or materials.

Out of this conviction up to now have come nearly 29 million Ford cars—each of them a finer car than it had to be in terms of any standards for its price when it was made.

Out of this conviction, it has become possible for the low-price car buyer to have the type of engine in his car that only the most expensive cars had before.

Through 38 years we have earned for the Ford its title as Quality Car of the Low-Price Field. And we shall keep on earning it from here.

Some Ford Advantages for 1941:

NEW ROOMINESS. Bodies are longer and wider this year, adding as much as seven inches to seating width.

with new frame and stabilizer, softer springs, improved shock absorbers.

power with economy. This year, more than ever, Ford owners are enthusiastic about the economy and fine all-round performance of Ford cars.

dows increased all around to give nearly four square feet of added vision area in each '41 Ford Sedan.

LARGEST HYDRAULIC BRAKES in the Ford price field, give added safety, longer brake-lining wear. GET THE FACTS AND YOU'LL GET A FORD!

seat a mutual friend. When Zanuck later had a falling-out with Sam Goldwyn, Fairbanks gave a dinner and brought the two together. A week later Fairbanks and Goldwyn were no longer speaking. Zanuck felt it was his turn to be the peacemaker and for several years made efforts to give a Goldwyn-Fairbanks peace dinner, but without success.

The most celebrated of Zanuck's practical jokes was one he concocted while cruising to Mexico in a chartered yacht. Reporters met the yacht, only to find that Zanuck had apparently disappeared during the trip, or never started; the celebrity aboard the yacht was a broken-nosed man with a monocle who was presented as "Ambassador Gerard, goodwill plenipotentiary from the British Empire to Mexico." During his Mexican stay, Zanuck passed himself off as the Ambassador's secretary while the Ambassador himself-one Doug Gerard, a studio bit-player and longtime Zanuck court jester received the plaudits of the masses, spending quantities of money which his secretary slipped to him from time to time. At the bullfights the band played God Save the King in Gerard's honor; Estrada, the Matador, having killed in fine form, threw the bull's ear up to the Ambassador's box-a poetic moment which was marred when the Ambassador, who had partaken of native beverages, slipped through an aperture between the seats and had to be pulled out by his secretary. Later, at the secretary's suggestion, the Ambassador danced a solo tango in a fashionable night club, a feat which he performed without such artificial aids as shoes or stockings.

Zanuck's friendship with Gerard dates back a long way. Gerard, once a director for Rudolph Valentino, was generous to Zanuck when the boy from Wahoo was trying to make the grade. Now Zanuck keeps him working. One of the cutters working for him is the man who threw the rivet Zanuck got fired for dropping in a San Pedro shipyard long ago. If the measure of a man is his friends, Zanuck adds up both ways-at the top as well as the bottom. Lord Beaverbrook, whom he met on his polo trip to England, became one of his closest friends; so did Anthony Eden who even among the distractions of war continues to correspond with him. Admiral Byrd named a mountain for him in Antarctica and the late Martin Johnson trekked 250 miles through the African bush to resume a friendship they had started at a New York dinner table.

As U. S. tycoons go, Zanuck is not wealthy but the industry which he adorns will never have to give a benefit for him. He holds 100,000 shares of Twentieth Century-Fox common, 20,000 shares of preferred, and an option, which has five years to run, to buy 100,000 more shares at a dollar a share above the last recorded sale. His children own 30,000 shares. His salary is $225,000 a year. In tip-top shape at 38, he points to a company profit for the first three months of 1941 as proof that things are going well again. "It's going to be a great year," he insists. "Maybe the greatest this company has ever had."

Facts, of course, might refute him. It is still possible that in 1941 the wonder-boy system might pass from the Hollywood scene; if this happens it certainly behooves Hollywood to record that system for future generations. Probably the best way to do this would be to make a crypt under some cornerstone and bury Zanuck in it-not, however, without a warning as to what the future generations in question would find when they opened the crypt. For Darryl Francis Zanuck would be alive down there. Nobody who knows him could doubt that. He would come out with a cigar in his mouth, swinging his polo mallet. "I've been thinking this thing over," he would say, "and it's given me a great idea—one that should make a terrific picture. A guy gets buried underneath a cornerstone-and when they dig him up and so on and so forth-God Almighty! What a terrific scene! The louse is still alive!"

Zanuck the warrior wears his uniform as a lieutenant colonel in Signal Corps Reserve. He does his bit for the Army by producing educational shorts to be shown to draftees.

BREAKFAST IN A BEANERY AFTER THE BALL RESTORES MOST SIGMA CHI

Life Goes to a South Sea Islands Ball

Sigma Chi Sweethearts step out in sarongs for an evening of tropic revelry at Georgia Tech

To the generally sober, conscientious and hard-working engineers of Georgia Tech, the Sigma Chi dance of March 14 was like a visit to Lotus Land. Few young men in Georgia, or in all the South, dedicate themselves to their curricular labors more uncompromisingly than Georgia Tech's self-styled "rambling wrecks." Few have time for week-night dates, for really sustained and conscientious drinking or for perfecting the more intricate evolutions of the modern dance. But intermittently one or another of Tech's fraternities gives a party. The creative imaginations of future architects and engineers go to work. Social energies come roaring out of scholastic cells. And the result is something that makes a Yale prom or a Princeton house party look as ungirdled as darning night at the ladies' aid.

For their spring dance, the Sigma Chi's chose a South Seas setting—partly because it was cheap to recreate, partly because straw skirts and sarongs are cool, unencumbering and supremely distracting when well worn by pinks or buttermilks (i.e. quite young fry from Atlanta Girls High). They draped Spanish moss, seaweed and bamboo, specially imported from Florida and South Georgia, on the walls of Atlanta's Peachtree Gardens; hung painted monkeys amid the foliage; and came costumed as planters, sailors, beachcombers and cannibal kings. To their delight most of Sigma Chi's sweethearts came as Polynesian natives, bare-armed and barelegged and a few partly barebodied. Each girl got a lei as a souvenir. Dancing ceased at 1 sharp, because, unfortunately, there were classes next day as usual—at 8 a. m.

The white man's burden rests lightly in the receptive arms of Albert ("Wimpy") Willis, who invited three girls to the dance, stood all of them up, went stag. His burden: Ann Upchurch, 20.

Sweethearts of Sigma Chi are toasted with orange juice at breakfast after dance. The girls joined escorts in singing famed ballad, Rambling Wreck from Georgia Tech.

Cannibal King Charlie Sherrod proudly displays nasal bracelet to Barbara Dillon. Barbara, who came as a cruise tourist in lei and tight-fitting pajamas, was belle of ball.

Bushed beachcombers of Kappa Sigma, Tom Raine and Clay Lewis, sprawl on the floor. Consoling them is 18-year-old Nell Goodman from Atlanta Girls' High School.

Barefoot dancing becomes more popular as evening wears on. Many discarded shoes or authentic South Seas style. Legs at right belong to date of Sigma Chi president.

Getting dressed to go home are Mia Hecht, hula girl, and Escort John Axton in abbreviated beach costume. Fur coats worn over sarongs were a common sight at 2 a.m.

VIENNA DUEL

Sirs:

These pictures, which I made in Vienna in 1932, show a freshman dueler before and after his first encounter. At that time there were 55 Korps (clubs) in Vienna alone, and each member was required to fight at least one duel (mensur) per university semester. No grudge fight, the duel is arranged by the clubs; hence the fighter does not even know his opponent in most cases. The weapon used is the schlaeger—neither foil, saber nor rapier. It has a double-edged blade 34 in. long, with a square tip like an old-fashioned razor—and just as sharp. The fighting style is the Deutsch-hoch, the German highstyle used by Bismarck. There is no footwork, as in fencing, the fighters standing with legs braced just the length of the weapon apart. The official duel consists of 45 periods of eight blows each, with time out for rest and stanching the flow of blood from cuts received.

Immediately after Hitler came to power dueling was legalized in Germany, fitting into the program of "Körper-kultur" (body culture) which produced the hardened, ruthless German soldier of today.
